Is This How Reducing Originated Over a century ago it was the fashion in Tyrol for the bridegroom to make some monetary present to his wife's family on the occasion of his wedding.

One young man refused point-blank to make such a present, thereby wrecking his betrothal party.

The prospective parents-in-law took the young man before the Mayor, and accused him of deliberately breaking an old Tyrol custom.

So the Mayor, who was a wise man, decided that the youngster should "buy" his bride at the rate of 20 cents a pound. The Mayor was a butcher in private life.

The bride scaled 160 pounds! The Mayor stated, however, that the groom should pay on her weight when she married.

Six months later the young man was still waiting, and the girl went into a decline. She lost weight rapidly, and the boy friend brightened up.

He bought in at the fall of the market. The girl signed the register 50 pounds lighter.

Vesuvius Dying Out

NAPLES, Dec. 21.—According to the latest scientific research, Vesuvius, that wonderful landmark of the beautiful Bay of Naples, is in process of dying out like a fluttering candle.

The faithful American tourists who climb and sweat up to the brink of the crater under the guidance of a handsome olive-skinned guide, will soon look down and see only the place where the boiling lava used to be.

The observation station on the brink of Vesuvius reports that the eternal fires are slowly but surely diminishing, the subterranean rumblings are muting imperceptibly and the sleek black plume of smoke which used to hang over the glorious bay will soon appear to be nothing more than a thin wisp of light cloud.

In this connection it is interesting to call to mind that at the dawn of the Christian era, until the year 79 A. D., Vesuvius was cold and its fires apparently dead.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 21.—The brilliant New Year's Day diplomatic breakfast given by Secretaries of State for years past in connection with the official New Year's Day reception at the White House, will be given up this coming holiday season, partly because of the depression.

Because the President may be away on a Christmas week vacation trip to Florida and because the breakfast affair has grown to unwieldy proportions Harry L. Stimson, Secretary of State, has decided to make the occasion into a much more modest exchange of greetings.

One practical reason understood to be back of the change was the Secretary's wish to avoid display at a time when suffering from the effects of the depression is widespread.

Last year 1,450 diplomats, members of Congress, Supreme Court Judges and army and navy officers were invited to the colorful affair at the Pan-American Union, Secretary Stimson will be "at home" on his Woodley estate to such diplomats as may care to call.

Mr. Gogg, whose shop it was that was opened under the privilege but three days ago, is one, and he claimed additional links with the City as being a descendant of that Gog whose effigy adorns the Guildhall.

It is as a free vintner that I have opened this shop," he said to a Morning Post representative, "and I believe it is only the free vintners who have the least chance of starting new liquor trades in this port of London, for to obtain an excise license is almost impossible.

The privilege is so wide in its terms that if I wished I could take a cask of wine down the Strand and purvey it to anybody that cared to buy without the least fear of interference—except to be called in to show my credentials.

"The company itself made a rule that we should observe the normal licensing hours, otherwise we should

Unburied Dead On French Battlefields

PARIS, Dec. 21.—The clearing-up process and reconstruction work on the battlefields of France are continuing. Fourteen years after the greatest war of all times—which, in the retrospect, looks to us now-days like child's play in view of the possibilities of modern "scientific," chemical and bacteriological warfare developed since the outbreak of peace—they are still not finished!

Great Britain's million and eight thousand dead, America's five hundred thousand, France's and Germany's untold losses, to say nothing of Austria-Hungary's—all these may be forgotten, or cherished in memorials of stone or in service on Armistice Day. But all the time, the work of finding, identifying and burying the corpses on the fields of France goes on.

However, terrible as this picture may be, there are signs that the work may soon be ended. In the month of October, in the notorious "Red Zone," that former district of "No Man's Land" near Arras, 192 skeletons alone have been found. On the basis of rags of old uniforms and identity-discs, it could be established that these were 44 of the French and 148 of the German fallen. It was only possible to identify 39 Frenchmen and 16 Germans.

The remaining 137 belong to the immense number of unknown dead, whose name no man knows and who today are symbolized throughout the nations of the world by the various monuments and perpetual fires to the memory of the "Unknown Soldier." It is a terrifying thought that many a mother, wife or sweetheart in the secret depths of her heart may still believe that one of those now found on the battlefields formerly reported among the "missing," may still be alive and may one day return home to his friends and family. Hope never dies, and there have actually been those who have returned from distant Siberia, Tashkend and Samarkand, even at this late date. Back came an Austrian peasant one month ago with his Russian wife and several children to his family and native place in Tyrol. In the meantime, while it is necessary to "outlaw war" in Geneva and the Councils of Nations, they have not yet finished burying the dead in France.

Judgment Reserved In Pitre Appeal

OTTAWA, Dec. 22.—The question of whether or not Norman J. Pitre will be tried again for the murder of George Smith at Teta-gouche, near Bathurst, N. B., rested today with the Supreme Court of Canada. Judgment was reserved on Pitre's appeal from a New Brunswick Supreme Court judgment which credited that the accused man be tried again for the crime, after once being acquitted.

Mr. Justice LeBlanc of the New Brunswick Supreme Court, heard the first trial with a jury which acquitted Pitre. The judge had objected to production of a certain letter written by Pitre, and to admission of evidence by an expert, brought forward by the Crown. The crown presented these facts as well as the question of accepting the uncorroborated evidence of an alleged accomplice, brother of the accused, to the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. That court ordered a new trial and Pitre brought the present appeal.

Stimson To Abandon Diplomatic Breakfast

Backward Children Specially Helped

MONTREAL, Dec. 22.—(C.P.)—"Don't lose sight of the poor backward child," was the appeal made by Miss Joyce Wood of the School for Subnormal children, to her fellow teachers at their annual convention of the English-speaking teachers of the Montreal Catholic School Board. Often this type of child was endowed with a good amount of commonsense but special help was needed to enable him to adapt himself to his environment.

First he should be given the minimum amount of scholastic work, second, he should be taught a trade and third he should have a hobby.

Miss Wood was one of several teachers sent to London, England, last year by the Catholic School Commission to attain practical experience in dealing with backward children. While there she taught in 22 schools of which seven were for infants of three to seven years of age and two were for seniors.

One London school she described had three-room flats attached where the girls could obtain practical lessons in housekeeping. In some schools poor children were given dinner and bathed, she said, and were also supplied with cod liver oil, milk and bus tickets free.

Communists Are Deported

HALIFAX, Dec. 21.—(By The Canadian Press)—Six of 10 aliens held here for deportation as Communists have been sent out of Canada and four are still at immigration detention sheds at this port, according to a source identified with legal efforts of the men to remain in the Dominion. Immigration Inspector Hubert M. Grant could not be reached for comment on the report.

The men believed to have been sent out of the country are Arvo Vaara, native of Finland and editor of the Finnish language newspaper Vapaus; Martin Parker, his secretary; Hans Kist, of Berlin; Conrad Cessinger, Bavarian; and John Farcas, of Hungary. John Stahlberg, Montreal manager for Vaara's paper, was sent to the United States last Thursday. He was a naturalized citizen of that country.

Vaara and Parker are said to have been started on their way across the Atlantic "several days ago," though on what steamer they travelled was unknown. The Pulaski sailed for Gdynia, Poland last week.

Cessinger, Farcas and Kist, the story goes, were seen among a little group of deportees being placed aboard the North German Lloyd liner Dresden yesterday. The Dresden sailed for New York, whence she will cross to Bremen.

Ultimate destinations of the deportees could not be learned. Lacking word from Ottawa, Halifax immigration officials were reluctant to discuss the case.

Several weeks ago a number of the men, fearing rigorous treatment or even death in the countries of their origin if they were sent back there, had expressed a wish to go to Russia. In this connection, C. B. Smith, K. C. of Halifax, who acted for the Crown in opposing the appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada, said he knew "the department was sympathetic."

"They could be sent to any country to which they could get passports," he said.

Removal of the five in addition to Stahlberg, would leave four men here: John Sembaj, formerly Iwan Sembaj, native of Ukraina who came to Canada in 1923 and was an organizer of the Ukrainian Labor Farmer Temple Association; Stefan Wrozczyt, who came to Montreal from Poland six years ago; Dan Holmes, whose name had been changed from Dan Chomicki, a native of Austria, arrested in Winnipeg and Frederick Zurcher, Swiss brought here from Vancouver.

Since their arrival last May these men, without ever having left their detention quarters, were the centre of a long-drawn out legal fight for release. All ten were ordered deported by an immigration tribunal, before which Sergeant John Leopold of the R. C. M. P. appeared to tell of the Communist interests of the various organizations to which they belonged. All ten appealed to the Minister of Immigration, who reserved his decision pending the results of actions on the part of eight of them for release under the liberty of subject act. Three courts, finally the Supreme Court of Canada, denied their appeals, the Minister refused to rescind the deportation order, and when application for a stay of proceedings pending an appeal to the Privy Council was refused, their last hope of remaining in the country vanished, though the case could still go before the Privy Council.
