MASS PLAYS

The old mass play in football is merely an ancient memory, but it can be utilized in some good way now. Imagine the energy of the world's series ball crowd if it could be harnessed to some kind of war work. Imagine 40,000 men on the farms of Canada for a length of time equal to that generally spent in witnessing ball games. Here is a job for a statistician—figure out how much could be accomplished in horse-power units by the baseball crowds of normal times. Lovers of baseball and other sports should organize parties of old sports cronies and spend their holidays this season with the harvesters. It would not be hard on any individual and the combined energy of a mass play would accomplish something. Think it over.

RED CROSS NOT A CHARITY

Probably the average woman understands her individual responsibility to this war as well as does the average man. If she does not, if she takes her war work very much as she does any diversion she would be inclined to hoist the blame to the shoulders of those of the opposite sex who enlarge into panegyric whenever women and war are mentioned together. It is difficult to attach the blame with certainty; that there is some blame, however, must be admitted. There have lately been numerous complaints, unofficial but definite, that numbers of women who have joined Red Cross workroom forces are playing fast and loose with the engagement; when the work to be done pleases, they come; when it is dull, they remain away. When easy and interesting bandages are to be made there are volunteers in plenty; when too familiar and rather more difficult sewing is to be done, places are empty. This is a sorry sort of understanding of war service. Each one of us, man or woman, is under obligation to contribute to this high cause not what he or she will but what he or she can. There is no election and nothing is really voluntary for where there is no actual drafting by law it is only because the moral force for drafting is deemed sufficient. The Red Cross is not a "charity" but an arm of the military service. The wounded do not appeal with tears for our sympathy; they have rights we are bound to respect, and one of them is the right to get back into the trenches and carry on the fight. Florence Nightingale once said to a class of nurses: "Our brains are pretty nearly useless if we only think of what we want and should like ourselves and not of what posts are wanting. What would you think of a soldier who, if he were to be on duty in the honorable post of difficulty, as sentry maybe in the face of the enemy, were to answer his commanding officer, 'No, he had rather mount guard at barracks or study musketry?' Those women who hold their work for the war in the light of an entertainment should be deprived the privilege of wearing the Red Cross.—From The Villager. A Furniture Polish A mixture of linseed oil and kerosene makes a good furniture polish.

Chalmers MADE IN CANADA

ONE question must arise in every motorist's mind when he reads of the Chalmers "Hot Spot" and "Ramshorn" manifold.

How do they affect the performance of the car?

That is a question to-day's Chalmers can answer in a most convincing manner.

When you drive the car—as you surely will—you will recognize the unusual smoothness—the unusual efficiency that has been attained.

The handicap of low-test gas has been largely overcome. The Chalmers motor "warms up" instantly into smooth, responsive action. You will admire the fine easy-working controls, the flexibility and power of the motor.

The more critical you may be the higher appreciation you will have of this sensibly priced car.

You are invited to test to-day's Chalmers any time. Arrange for a demonstration to suit your convenience.
