Marrying A Prince May Not Be All Sunshine

But Heiress To Millions Has Wonderful Trousseau, Which Should Be A Help To Her.

It is not all cakes and ale to annex a Prince in the marriage market, if one may judge by the matrimonial difficulties of two of the three celebrated princesses of the Georgian House of Medani, all of whom have an extraordinary penchant for American brides. Yet all their troubles will not interfere with the marriage of the third to an American heiress, the bride-to-be's father assured the United Press in Paris.

Franklin L. Hutton, father of Barbara Hutton, New York and Palm Beach society girl who is engaged to marry Prince Alexis Medani, was interviewed in his sumptuous hotel suite.

"You know that old saying," he said. "One can't choose one's relatives."

"Paris society says you are furious and are trying to break the match," Hutton was told.

"That's not true," he replied. "The marriage will go through as scheduled."

"Don't you think Miss Hutton's millions figures in the romance?" "I can't tell what is in his mind," Hutton said. "Maybe at the beginning that counted. But now it's a love affair. I cannot see why Barbara, who is the sweetest girl in the world, cannot be loved for herself."

Worked Hard
Hutton said he realized Prince Alexis had "worked hard" to marry Miss Hutton.

"It's unfortunate his first marriage was unhappy," he said, "but I am sure Barbara will be happy with her prince."

The Brothers
While Prince Alexis and Miss Hutton, heiress to the Woolworth five and ten cent store fortune, prepared for a civil marriage on Tuesday, to be followed by the religious ceremony on Thursday, the Prince's two brothers, Serge and David, were trying to make arrangements to get back into the United States to settle their troubles with their American wives.

Mae Murray, motion picture actress and wife of David, and Mary McCormick, opera singer and wife of Serge, got together in Los Angeles several days ago and threw their joint business into receivership. Both wives charged that while they had provided a large share of the capital for the business and it yielded a good income, the Princes had failed to support them. Miss Murray is asking for a divorce. Miss McCormick is asking separate maintenance.

The brothers came here to be present at Alexis' wedding. They applied at the American Consulate for return visas and were told their applications would have to be passed on in Washington.

"We want work," Prince Serge protested, "not women."

The Trousseau
Miss Hutton's trousseau will be the most sumptuous of any post-war bride in Paris. Her coat cost $4,575 and her ermine coat $5,999. Included in the trousseau are $200 worth of cosmetics, four street pocket books at $80 each, three evening purses at $50 each, $500 worth of lingerie, a dozen pairs of gloves and a dozen pairs of stockings costing $180.

She has almost 100 costumes, but in spite of wide choice there is nothing bizarre or striking. She has shown excellent taste—her trousseau will have that restrained, apparently simple look that constitutes real elegance.

At Patous she has chosen thirty costumes which include five evening gowns, two or three evening jackets, five informal and sports taileurs, five tennis dresses, two tailored dresses, four simple afternoon frocks, six afternoon ensembles of dress and coat, one cocktail dress and one pyjama suit.

In addition to these, Patou is making her wedding gown. It is specially designed for her, made of gleaming creamy satin, trimmed with real lace, a family heirloom.

Tailored Things Preferred

From the gowns included in her trousseau, it is evident the bride prefers tailored to fluffy clothes, but she insists upon their all having some touch of fantasy to relieve severity.

She has chosen several grey flannel sports things and a simple white silk pique tennis dress is copied in mauve, coral red, pink and yellow. She picked only one pyjama suit.

Her one piece dresses are all simple. Tiny checks in black and white, grey for sports and informal wear, two or three black dresses with organdy or lingerie touches and an afternoon suit composed of a black satin dress with checked sleeves and a white checked silk jacket. For formal afternoon there are plain colored coats over printed chiffon or crepe de chene dresses, with gray-blue the favored color scheme.

Chiffons for Evening
For evening, there are a number of printed chiffons in floral designs, many with black grounds and one or two with silvery mauve effects. To accompany these there are several little fitted velvet jackets, with and without fur. One very handsome jacket is black panne velvet, with wide and originally shaped ermine sleeves.

Accessories have been given great attention. Gloves to match each dress, usually with gauntlets of the same material. Organza gloves in white and dotted design, Patou mittens, sports bags in twine or crocheted, demoting that Miss Hutton will have at least 100 pairs of gloves and about half that many bags.

Totally different yet also very Parisian are the models chosen by Miss Hutton at Chanel's. One particularly attractive evening dress is of all-over embroidered organdy, with the design traced in black.

It has the off-the-shoulder bodice, outlined by a double flounce of bias-cut fabric and set rather high in front, with narrow straps. The skirt is molded to the knees where it flares impulsively. The belt is set just above the hipline.

Capelets Are Intriguing
Chanel's little evening capelets, particularly the one with four petal-like folds of the material turning upwards, tying at the neck, are included. One is of gold lame and another in black organdy. Here, too, she picked a vivid red-printed shantung summer suit, with a tiny white laurel leaf figure. It has a double-breasted belted jacket, and slightly flaring skirt and white organdy blouse, with frilled edges to the collar and cuffs, which are worn outside the jacket.

An afternoon dress, also of this figured shantung, is a beautiful shade of blue, particularly becoming to Miss Hutton's coloring and her fair hair. The skirt has soft folds in front, loosely gathered together and amusing triangular pockets set almost on the hipbones. The bodice is intricately cut, with rather high neckline and a jabot effect in front, softly draped and tying its two ends in the back. Still another afternoon suit is black shantung with a tiny white floral design, worn with a vestee; an informal green wool suit with a double-breasted jacket faced with green and white striped cotton and has a blouse to match the facing.

In printed shantung, too, but in a vivid scarlet, is a pyjama model the design being a white star. They are one-piece pyjamas, with narrow shoulder straps, the trousers cut on the bias, fitted at the hips and flaring at the hem. The tiny jacket has short cape sleeves and ties at the back above the waistline.

To deodorize dishes which have been used either for raw or cooked fish, add two tablespoons of baking soda to the soapy water in which you wash them.
To cool any hot food quickly, set it in a pan of cold water that has been well salted.
Try poaching eggs in milk instead of water. They are far more delicious and have gained in food value.
When chocolate is to be melted line the upper part of the double boiler with waxed paper and place on it the cut-up chocolate. When the chocolate is melted, remove it and throw the paper away. The pan will be perfectly clean.
