Two Policemen Disagreement Arraigned With Kidnappers At Conference

(Associated Press)
GENEVA, Jan. 14.—Disagreement between employers and workers delegations upon the question of the maintenance of wages at their present levels became more clearly emphasized today in debate at the International Labor Conference on a proposal for a 40-hour week.

The workers stoutly defended their resolution demanding that the reduction in hours be accomplished without a pay cut, declaring that employers must share the burdens of the depression and must provide more equitable distribution if the present system is to survive.

Arthur Hayday, representing British workers, expressed regret that the United States is not participating officially in the meeting.

Spokesmen for the workers argued that to hold the pay scale unchanged while reducing hours and increasing the number of workers employed would increase purchasing power, thus benefitting industry as a whole.

Assistant chief inspector, John J. Sullivan told assembled detectives that the police had a '100 per cent case' against all five men. But he talked mostly of the two officers.

"These men," he shouted as he glared at the accused policemen, "are worse than sewer rats coming from their holes covered with slime. They are an unqualified disgrace to us."

Of the two, Arthur B. Graef has been in the police department 11 years and John Nevins five years. Graef put up such a fight when he was arrested that the banners on the stairway in his home were broken.

The other prisoners were Frank Miller, a clerk who has been arrested 20 times and who has served a term in Sing Sing prison; Max Geller, a seaman; and Leonard Gkwelezyk, a chauffeur.

As told by the police, the story of the kidnapping and its developments was as follows:

On December 27 Schoenig appeared as a witness in a liquor case in Federal Court. As he left the courtroom he was met in the corridor by patrolmen Graef and Nevins, told that he was wanted in another case and taken to the street and into an automobile. The other three men were in the car.

First they took him to a garage in Brooklyn, then gave him a pair of glasses, the lenses of which had been taped, and ordered him to wear them. He was taken to a vacant apartment in Manhattan and held there until his release. On three occasions, he was forced to write letters to his wife, requesting payment of $100,000 ransom. Finally on January 10, the two officers came and ordered his release.

Not Doped

TOKYO, Jan. 14.—(A.P.)—Ryuzo Nichimoto, a member of the directorate of the Japan Aquatic Association, commenting on charges from the United States that Japanese Olympic swimmers were "doped" with oxygen, said that liquid oxygen sometimes was administered at Los Angeles to assist recovery from exhaustion but denied it influenced the Japanese victories.

Nichimoto said the oxygen was administered on the advice of a group of Japanese physicians who were consulted before the departure of the team for Los Angeles.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 14.—(A.P.)—Robert Kiphuth, coach of the last United States Olympic swimming team, said today he had "absolutely no criticism" to make of the training methods used by the Japanese in the 1932 Olympic games.

Commenting on a charge made by Mann, swimming coach at the University of Michigan, that Japanese swimmers were administered "oxygen or some stimulant" before the finals, Kiphuth said:

"I have found the Japanese to be among the finest sportsmen I have met in my whole experience, and I have absolutely no criticism of their methods of training."

Drowning Tragedy At Jordan Falls

(Canadian Press)
JORDAN FALLS, N. S. Jan. 14.—Trapped by a submerged tree after he fell from a bridge, Hibbert Barclay drowned today in a swift-running brook before his companions freed him.

The 19-year old youth was starting out with Harold Bell and Burton Smith to hunt geese. Bell and Smith had crossed the bridge when they heard a splash. Seeing Barclay struggling to get away from the branches, they hurried back. He appeared unconscious when they reached him. One held his head above water while the other released his body, but the youth was lifeless when they brought him to shore. The coroner decided an inquest was unnecessary.

The victim was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Barclay of Jordan Falls.

No Truth In Peace Talk

GENEVA, Jan. 14.—(A.P.)—China informed the League of Nations today that there is no truth in reports the Chinese government has appointed a negotiator to reach a settlement with Japan in the conflict over Shanghai.

The Chinese position was set forth to the League by Dr. W. W. Yen, China's league delegate.

The Rengo (Japanese) news agency reported Thursday that peace terms had been discussed by Japanese and Chinese military officers meeting in the presence of British naval officers at Chinwangtao, the Chinese port near Shanghai.

The Chinese officer who participated in the conference, the Rengo correspondent said, was the representative of General Ho Chu-Kuo, Chinese Commander whose troops were driven out of Shanghai by the Japanese.

Says Interests Threatened In North China

TOKYO, Jan. 14.—(A.P.)—Sir Francis Lindley, Ambassador from Great Britain, informed the Japanese Government today that British interests in North China are threatened by the tense situation growing out of the Japanese occupation of Shanghai.

The Ambassador, the Japanese Government, was understood, acted under instructions from his government. He conferred with Foreign Minister Uchida. The interview was described as most friendly.

Maj-Gen. Seely Writes a Novel About R. C. M. P.

(By Thos. T. Champion, Canadian Press Staff Writer.)
LONDON, Jan. 14.—(C.P.)—Major-General the Rt. Hon. J. E. B. Seely has quite a lot to say about the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and about Major General Archie Macdonell in his latest book, "For Ever England," published by Hodder and Stoughton. In this book says General Seely, I attempt to show the essential nobility of the English character, especially as it seems to me, its refusal at desperate moments ever to despair.

His first chapter concerns an incident of a nightingale singing to cheer its mate in the midst of shell fire amongst "my valiant Canadians" on the Somme. There are character sketches of worthies following humble lives in the Isle of Wight, where the Seely family has long been rooted. Incidentally the General insists on how little change there has been either in the character of the inhabitants of the Wight or in their surroundings, and looking upon rural England as a whole he concludes that not only on the religious question has bitterness abated, but in many other ways the countryside is freed from that most dreadful of all defects—envy.

General Seely's first hand knowledge of war abroad is profound, and he played a not inconsiderable part in the war at home, represented by the General Strike. His conclusion is that the average man and woman faced up to revolution and decided against it. Its swift finish, he thinks, was the triumph of the amateur over the professional and of good humor over hate.

The Canadians whom he commanded in the War, declares General Seely, were one and all imbued with the man who had most to do with creating that spirit in the men who served under him in France was Archie Macdonell, "in many ways quite the most remarkable man I have ever known." General Seely gives a page or two of Archie Macdonell's reminiscences of his early police days, which provoke in the author the reflection that the Canadians brought to France a high, if a strange tradition.

"During the three and a half years I was with them," continues Seely, "I was, of course, as all others were who survived for so long in the front line, quite close to hundreds of these men who were killed or mortally wounded. Never once did I hear them complain; swear perhaps, but strangely enough, not often—whimper, never. Again and again I have asked a dying Canadian soldier on the battlefield how he was. Always the same answer: 'Fine, sir.' This rule of cheerfulness under all circumstances, however desperate, sustained these valiant souls even until the very moment of death."

The teacher in reply thanked the pupils for their kind and thoughtful remembrance. Then amid music and merriment "Santa Claus," impersonated by Mr. James McCann, arrived in traditional fashion and unloaded the sparkling Christmas tree of its abundant supply of gifts, much to the enjoyment of the children.

The teacher treated all present with home made candy.

Complimentary remarks were made by some present, all speaking of the good work done in the school room and the enjoyable afternoon spent.

The proceedings were brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

Following is the address:—
Mr. Thomas McAvinn, B. A., Kelly's Cross.
Dear Teacher:—
Christmas again has rolled around, that most joyous season of the year.

When greetings are sent from friend to friend
And gifts are scattered far and near.

Dear teacher please accept our thanks,
And our sincere appreciation,
For pleasant and untiring pains
To help increase our education.

Kindly accept this token of regard,
Its value is slight and small,
But with it goes our best wishes
And the esteem you are held by all.

It's only a pair of kid gloves
We very heartily present to you
A remembrance and a souvenir
Of your pupils numbering thirty-two.

But when the discovery is made that Turkish towels did not originate in Turkey, and that the clothe-lines of the ancient Turkish people knew them not, then practically all the newspapers in the world contain an item about it. And why? Perhaps it is because everyone has an interest in the subject from personal contacts. And again, the Turkish towel is next to soap, the universal symbol of cleanliness. It is in practically every home. It has wielded an important influence among the children. But it is not a Turkish towel at all and just to prove it the scientists attest to the discovery of "Turkish towels" in an Egyptian tomb 4000 years old.

There goes another of our treasured myths. It may be that hotel offices will be receiving calls for "Egyptian towels" hereafter—and it may not. The old "Turkish towel" is too close to the people to be dropped in a moment.

TO THE DEAR DEAD

O Dead! In your tomb solitary sleeping,
You know no more the sorrow, the weeping,
The misery of life.
For you the sky has no sun, no star
The spring no bloom, you hear afar
No worldly strife.

Silent and still, in your immobility
You ask but peace! 'E'en your mutability
Is without sound.
No worldly clamor cleave the deep
Lone grave, where you so calmly sleep,
'Neath hallowed ground.

The scented breeze shall linger by
Your lonely grave, then wait on high
A silent tear,
A thought, a sigh, a heartfelt prayer!
All these shall be, from year to year,
A lasting souvenir!

—Mrs. Robert Gelland.
