Happenings of the Week

Do something for somebody—some- where. While jogging along life's road; Help somebody to carry his burden. And lighter will grow your load.

Do something for somebody, striving To help where the ways seem long, And the homeless hearts that languish Cheer up with a little song.

Do something for somebody always, Whatever may be your creed, There's nothing on earth can help you So much as a kindly deed.

Do something for second childhood, To smooth out the wrinkles of care; Do something to cheer up the lonely That you have with you every- where.

Social circles in Ottawa anticipated with a great deal of interest the garden party given on Rideau Hall grounds by the Governor-General and Viscountess Willingdon on Thursday afternoon. It was the largest and in many respects the most interesting for several years. More than 4,000 invitations were issued, but, of course, some found it impossible to attend since it is the vacation season. The list included all the privy councillors and their wives, and some of the new cabinet ministers visited Government House for the first time. There was a mingling of members of the former Government and the new Govern- ment.

In addition to the official list which included judges, senators, govern- ment officials and leading clergy, invita- tions were extended to the British jurists arriving in Canada to at- tend the annual meeting of the Cana- dian Bar Association along with their wives. Many others were invited. The garden party was from 4 until 6:30 p. m. and the visitors were given an opportunity of viewing the beauti- ful lawns and gardens of Government House. The women wore afternoon dresses and, although morning coats were generally worn by the men, this mid-summer party was not so formal as on other occasions.

The visitors were presented to Their Excellencies. The Governor-General's Footguards' Band was in attendance.

As long ago as 1893 Queen Mary who observed her thirty-seventh wed- ding anniversary just recently, dressed today's vogue for encouraging British-made goods. For in accord- ance with British royalty's practice of patronizing British craftsmanship whenever possible, the bridal gown worn was woven on the looms of Spitafields. In every detail the crea- tion is of British workmanship; the silver and white brocade was woven with a design of roses, shamrocks and thistles, emblematic of the British Isles. The King, as Duke of York, wore at his wedding the uniform of captain in the royal navy, the rank of which he had attained before re- tiring from active service.

The Duke of York's visit to St. An- drew's last week for a round of golf was in anticipation of the ordeal of playing himself in as captain of the club next September. It will be re- called that the Prince of Wales, from sheer nerves, duffed the ball rather badly, a few years ago, when he became captain of St. Andrews. Both the brothers have improved wonder- fully during the last 12 months as golfers. The Prince has advanced more rapidly than the Duke for the reason that he has given more time and energy to the game. His handi- cap is 12, and neither the Duke of York nor the Duke of Gloucester has reached his mark. The probability is that the Duke will not duff his ball in September. If he does I under- stand he will have a small wager to settle with the Prince of Wales. The Duke is a strong driver, thanks to his height, which gives him an ad- vantage in this department of the game. The Prince of Wales is better on the green, but the margin of two between their handicaps fairly repre- sents their play.

The new dance for this Winter, demonstrated recently by the Imper- ial Society of Teachers of Dancing in London is the Mid-Way Rhythm. Its time, for variety's sake, lies half way between two steady favorite of the ordinary dancing public—the quick- step and the slow foxtrot. It has a walk and a glide like any slow fox- trot, and is complicated by a step called "the rock," in which the dan- cers swap backwards and forwards like a rocking horse. Miss Josephine Bradley, who demonstrated the dance with her partner, did not wear a long dress, and her skirt was divided at the side for greater dancing freedom. If this "mid-way rhythm" is really adopted by the dancing public, its rocking tendencies will have to be modified, or else long skirts will have to be kilted to the knee for the per- formance. The rocking and the long skirts will not be able to exist to- gether without disaster.

How Long is a Girl of Marriageable Age?— Shall This Widower Put His Elder Daugh- ter to Work so That He May Marry Again?—Friendship or Love?

Dear Miss Dix—How long can a girl stay single these days and still have a chance to marry? I was 22 this summer, but I am not ready to think of a husband. I take ballet dancing, and I want to learn more than I know now. I would like to go with different boys and have a few more years of good times. What do you think? FRIVOLOUS.

ANSWER:

There is no time limit on matrimony in these days. In olden times a girl was called an old maid if she had not married by the time she was 23 or 24. Now she is considered a kid up to that age, a girl at 30, and she doesn't get to be a bachelor girl until she is around the 40 mark.

Recently a famous Brooklyn Judge, who presides over a Domestic Relations Court, expressed the opinion that no girl should marry before she was 26 or 27, and advised women to wait until they were 30 they took the fatal step. This is good advice, for the older a girl is the better choice she will make, and the more fitted she is for matrimony.

The girl who marries in her teens is almost certain to regret it, because her taste changes, and the boy who appealed to her childish fancy does not satisfy her demand in a mate when she reaches maturity. Therefore, by the time she is 25 or 26 she is nearly always out of love with her husband and in love with some other man.

The very young girl has not had her playtime, and so she gets tired of the monotony of domestic life and wants to be running around with the other boys and girls. She is disgruntled because she has to stay at home and walk the baby with the colic instead of jazzing in a cabaret.

So you are very wise to put off marrying until you have had your fling at running around and want to settle down; wait until a good husband and a home look better to you than anything else.

Don't be afraid you won't have plenty of chances to marry when you are a little older. A woman is at her best when she is nearing the 30s and she attracts the men who are worth marrying.

You show your good sense in not tying yourself down to one boy until you are ready to marry. Go with as many as possible, and that will enable you to make a wise selection when you get ready to pick out one for keeps.

Girlhood is the only carefree time in a woman's life, and she is very foolish when she cuts it short. Stretch it out as long as you can. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a widower, 40 years of age, with two daughters. The oldest, 14, is in her first term at high school. I am engaged to a young woman, but I earn only $125 a month. My fiancée thinks we could get along on that, but could not support the children on it, which is quite true, as they are accustomed to plenty. What do you think I should do? Keep my children in school or put the oldest one to work and have her attend a com- mercial school at night? JACK.

ANSWER:

I think that you should put off getting married until your oldest girl has finished high school and has been taught some way to make a living. If you take her out of school now you blight her chances in life, as she will have to take some very menial and ill-paid job. You owe it to her to give her at least a high-schooled education. When she is on her feet she can help take care of the younger sister.

That will defer your wedding several years, but that is the price you will have to pay for your fatherhood. When a man brings children into the world he is in duty bound to think of their good before his own happiness.

Don't try to marry on $125 a month. You couldn't possibly support four persons on that without dragging your family down into utter wretchedness. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—When I was in the grades I liked my teacher pretty well, and when I went off to school I wrote to her, but her letters are full of re- ligious, and she tells me she likes me best. If I call on her or do her a favor she thanks me in a quiet way and only for me to hear. I would like to be very nice to her, as I am to my mother's friends, but I hate the soft stuff.

We boys want to know if there is any good to a fellow in the friendship of an older woman? JIM AND THE REST OF US.

ANSWER:

Perhaps your teacher isn't really trying to make love to you, Jim, but I like you because you resent even the suspicion of it. It shows that you are just the right sort of a clean-minded lad that you should be, and what is fine and decent in you is repelled at the idea of an older woman attempting to vamp you.

Inasmuch as your teacher has slithered over your relationship with a sickly sentimentality, I think you will never find any more pleasure in it, and you will be wise to drop her. It is a pity because it is the first tarnishing of your boy's ideals.

Now, to answer your question: It is a great disadvantage to a boy, it is a curse to him, to fall in love with a woman much older than himself.

There are women, you know, who are what other women call cradle- snatchers, and who prey on young boys. They use all their arts and wiles to ensnare a boy's fancy, and when he has given one of them his whole heart, she plays with it and throws it away and laughs at him.

Many a hard, bitter, cynical man has had his faith and regard for women and everything good and holy blasted for life by a schoolboy affair with his teacher.

Sometimes these older women marry their boy lovers, and that is worse for them still, because the boy almost invariably gets over his calf love and then finds himself tied to a woman nearly as old as his mother.

But when a boy has a nice, clean friendship with an older woman, it is one of the most beautiful and helpful experiences that can come into his life.

The older woman can teach him, as his mother cannot, about women. She can win his confidence and inspire and direct him. She can fire his ambition and encourage him and be in every way a liberal education to him.

I hope you and all the other boys will be lucky enough to find that kind of a woman friend. DOROTHY DIX.

The occasional use of the Tablets prevent stomach and bowel troubles, or if trouble comes suddenly—as it generally does—the Tablets will bring the baby safely through. "The employees who have, without reserve, conformed to the law, un- derstood their duty in their observance of impartiality and who have im- partially shown the respect due to the political authorities on their ac- credited representatives have nothing to fear from me. "I shall make a distinction between the latter and those who have con- stituted themselves the active agents of their party, or the carriers of lies and infamous calumnies. "It would be unjust and cruel, for instance, to put out on the street, without reason, a good father of a family who has been in office for a number of years and who might find it difficult to work elsewhere. "It is, I believe, in the Post Office Department that certain classes of employees are the most exposed to indulge in political partisanship.

If Baby has COLIC

A cry in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable pre- paration brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. Whenever there's need of gentle regulation. Children lose the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use. And a more liberal dose of Castoria is always better for growing children than some need- lessly strong medicine meant only for adult use. Genuine Castoria always has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Pres- cribed by doctors.
