

SMILES

FAMILIAR WITH ROYALTIES

Dora (dumb): That author must hold a very high social position. He: Why do you think so? Dora: I heard him say he had become familiar with royalties at last.

He: Science says man started from a single cell. She: Most of 'em should be taken back to one.

BETTER ON TIME "Never get a clock on tick." "No?" "No—better get it on time."

JUST STATING A TRUTH She: Dead men tell no tales. He: Why do you say that? She: I was just thinking you would never have married that little blond widow if they did.

SPOTTING THE BIRD Wife: William, you started on one of your teases this afternoon. I know—a little bird told me. Hubby (very gravely): Mary, if you don't hie!—got rid of that darned Mexican parrot I'll hie!—leave home.

The Unwilling Adventurers

BY MILDRED BARBOUR

THE PERFECT ACHIEVEMENT

Camilla Fielding, in a broadened morning jacket banded with white fox, was having her breakfast chocolate in a suite at the hotel, where she had passed the night. Between sips, she returned to her perusal of the morning papers, and her lovely, spoiled, petulant face took on an expression of surprise content. No cat, who made off with the canary could ever have worn such a look of satisfaction over a perfect achievement. Her own face, photographed, she noted thankfully, five years back, before those tiny, indefinable, but none the less irritating little fore-runners of middle age shadowed her beauty, smiled at her. Yes, the newspapers couldn't have printed a better photo, if she had selected it herself. She read in large important headlines:

"PROMINENT SOCIETY BEAUTY ON EVE OF SUIT FOR DIVORCE. MRS. HENRY FIELDING, WELL KNOWN IN GOTHAM'S EXCLUSIVE CIRCLES, ANNOUNCES ACTION FOLLOWING RAID ON TOWN RESIDENCE."

The ensuing half column of print stated that Mrs. Fielding, in company with two witnesses from a detective agency, had visited her town residence unannounced on the previous evening, while ostensibly attending a house party near her Long Island home. She had discovered in the town house, where her husband was spending the night, an unknown young woman, an elaborate supper, alcoholic refreshments—in short, every sign of a disgraceful orgy. The young woman had admitted that she was there at the invitation of Mr. Fielding, who, it was alleged, had succeeded in eluding the detectives by slipping through an open window into an alley at the rear of the house.

The account went on to state that Mrs. Fielding, in an explosive interview granted to a representative of the paper, stated that her lawyer would file suit for divorce against her husband within a day or so.

Camilla was reading the last paragraph with gusto when her maid announced a caller—Mrs. Annabel Higgins. "My dear!" the newcomer greeted Camilla with a peck on the cheek, "nothing short of a scandal would get me up at this hour! But the minute I saw the papers it had to be. So, I said to Celeste: 'Fix me in all your life and stand ready to drop my gown on as if I were a fire-engine horse going to a blaze!' Here I am. Now, darling, tell me all about it."

Camilla told, with rapidly mounting appreciation of her own cleverness. Her friend lit a cigarette. "Well, you're just plain lucky, that's all I can say!" she announced when the recital was finished. "I'll bet Henry Fielding never did such a thing before in all his life—he's not that sort and you know, my dear, I do know men—so it was pure luck that made you pick that particular night."

"The girl was good-looking," Camilla admitted grudgingly. "She probably wrapped him around her little finger. But so much the better for me."

Nevertheless, her gaze straying to the mirror of the dressing table opposite, she was devastating to men, particularly of late, to young men, to acknowledge the slow, but inexorable withdrawal of Nature's bounty. "What will you do after you're free?" her friend demanded. "For your course, you'll win your case. Henry's too sweet an old fool to cause you any further trouble."

Camilla shrugged her white, beautiful shoulders. "Well, naturally, there'll be alimony—lots of it. Henry is so generous to a fault. Fat men always are—I wonder why? And then, I may marry again." She smiled, worthy of a young girl, and a tiny smile touched the crimsoned bow of her lips.

"Yes, you may." There was a delicate irony in the caller's voice, an amused irony, almost skeptical, hardly complimentary. Camilla's eyes flew open questioningly. She was at the age where her ear was attuned to discover subtle inflections. "I mean to say," amended her friend hastily, "that there's hardly anybody in your present circle worthy to marry you. Most of the men are so ridiculous, young—and penniless, naturally."

"There's Jack Hartley," murmured Camilla, spreading her fingers to admire her beautiful nails. "The handsome polo player? My dear, his father would raise Old Ned!"

"Why?" queried Camilla sweetly, a sweetness spiked with acid. "Well—er—" she called was frankly stumped. "I don't know quite—except that I've heard that his father keeps pretty close watch on him, even from the Riviera where he's getting over rheumatism or something. Young Hartley has his mother's fortune and his father's will be tremendous and of course he's terribly good-looking and sought after. You can hardly blame his father for being anxious that he makes a suitable match. And a divorce—er—"

"How amusing," cooed Camilla. (To Be Continued)

Four Argonauts Return To Harvard

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 15.—Four young argonauts, have returned late for the opening of their classes at the Harvard law and business schools with a stirring tale of adventures in the far northwest to explain their tardy arrival.

After the close of their classes last June they paid $100 for a much-used automobile in which they drove to Regina, Sask., leaving their automobile there in the custody of the chief of police, they proceeded to Edmonton, where they purchased two canoes, shipped them to Waterways, paddled down the Clearwater to the Athabasca River through Lake Athabasca, down the Slave Lake and on down the Mackenzie to the tidewater of the Arctic Ocean 3000 miles from Harvard.

Returning, they selected a section of the Continental Divide which seemed to offer a good crossing and portaged, paddled and waded by way of the Rat, Little Bell, Porcupine and Yukon rivers to Fort Yukon. There they found a government radio station and one of them sent through the long-suppressed query to his family: "Safe. Say, did I pass my exams?" Then they stevedored and freight-handled their way through Fairbanks and Chicago, Nov. 15.—It is the rat, bang and roar of the city could be eliminated, the average life of residents would be prolonged about seven years, declares Chicago's commissioner of health, Dr. Herman N. Bunderson. Individual and community efficiency would at the same time be materially increased.

"Noise is always a tax on nerves," says the commissioner who has been attempting to lessen the street noises of Chicago. "It causes almost as much wear and tear as the exertion one puts forth in the performance of daily work. "Although one can and does get accustomed to noises which are a part of one's daily life, yet unusual and unnecessary noise tends to upset the nerves and cause annoyance. Constant din may also affect the brain in such a way as to cause dizziness, giddiness and nausea in some persons."

ALCOHOL AND ENERGY.

Every new scientific study of alcohol and its effects helps to demonstrate more exclusively than ever that alcohol is a foe to work. Prof. Dr. Emil Krapelin, of Munich University, has been making some rather remarkable experiments in this direction, using the ergograph, a machine invented by Prof. Angelo Mosso, of Turin.

Prof. Krapelin first took a total abstainer and measured his muscular efficiency with the ergograph ten times a day for some weeks. Then he gave the man a glass of Bordeaux wine after each meal, and proceeded with his measurements. In every case the worker showed a decline in efficiency varying between 7.6 and 8 per cent. After experimenting with a number of Germans, the professor tried the same experiment with men of other races and under different climatic conditions, and the results were practically the same. Then he tried another experiment to see just what effect alcohol had upon the mental powers.

Seward to Prince Rupert and thence to Regina, where they found that the chief of police had given them up for lost and had transferred the wheels of their automobile to his own. Stalled by snow on the Saskatchewan prairies, they were obliged to complete their return journey by train.

The four adventurers were Alfred E. Driscoll of Philadelphia, Sherwood K. Platt of Chicago, Alexander Letts of Pittsburgh and Pierce Onthank of Boston, all graduates of Williams College. Each spent about $250 beyond the cost of their automobile, and they're all satisfied that the trip gave them more thrills than it would be possible to obtain anywhere else for the same amount of money.

They made all their plans from a map of North America in a high school geography. Although they had to live for weeks on game, only one of them had experience with firearms and that as a member of the William rifle club. Yet, except for snow in August and mosquitoes all the time, they had no complaint to make. They found the Indians and Eskimos much more cordial than natives of the typical New England vacation resorts and quite as prosperous, because of the high price of furs, bringing a good trapper $3,000 easily in a season. A missionary who had been offered $10,000 by an Eskimo trapper for his radio set told them of listening in on hockey games broadcast from the Boston Arena.

He tried some accountants and tested their ability to add long columns of figures. His next experiment was without alcohol, and then they were given four cups of claret a day. On the very first day their work fell off 3.1 per cent, and it steadily declined until at the end of two weeks the loss was 15.3 per cent, in daily efficiency.

His next experiment was with printers' compositors, and one week of alcohol lessened their speed 9.6 per cent. In all these cases there was, of course, no evidence of intoxication, and doubtless each man would have denied that his working efficiency was impaired in the slightest degree, but the tests showed otherwise.

We would like to see a similar test made with tobacco. We have a suspicion the tobacco also diminishes in some degree the working efficiency of both brain and muscle workers.—Ex.

OCEAN LINERS WILL SOON BE DRIVEN BL ELECTRICITY NEW YORK, Nov. 15.—Ocean liners propelled by powerful electric engines that will permit control as positive as that of automobiles were predicted yesterday by W. B. Thau, noted authority on marine electric propulsion, in addressing the convention of the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers.

Electric propulsion, he said, will eliminate the necessity of engine room signals and place absolute control of the vessel on the ship's bridge, resulting in a reduction of operating expenses and increased safety.
