TWENTY-SIX PERISH IN SUNKEN SUB

The diving bell had been used for a wholesale rescue of men actually trapped aboard a sunken craft, but also it marked the first saving of the body of a submarine crippled at such a depth as 240 feet. The Squalus was disabled shortly after 9:40 a. m. yesterday when an open air induction valve poured water into the after part of the ship during a routine dive. Through a long day and night, and again today and tonight the craft lay on the mud bottom approximately 15 miles off this port. Still ahead of the rescuers lay a grim task. High navy officials reiterated tonight that divers would search each flooded compartment for the bodies of the dead, bringing them to the surface before the Squalus itself was dumped out and raised.

The rescue bell, which rose and fell on the surface, was used for the other during the day, first was dropped over the side of the submarine rescue ship Falcon at 12:40 p. m. A.D.T. little more than two hours after a diver first touched the Squalus. Approximately two hours later the bell brought the first seven survivors to the surface. The first man to breathe free air again after 29 hours of confinement in the cold, dark of the half flooded Squalus was Lieut. J. C. Nichols.

A civilian navy employee and five enlisted men stepped out of the rescue chamber behind him, were rushed into a decompression tank and then taken to a Portsmouth hospital.

Just as the bell broke the surface the sun came through the clouds, allowing Lieut. Nichols to step through a hatch in the roof of the chamber into a springlike atmosphere.

Overhead circled airplanes, cyllan and naval. Around the Falcon, which raised and lowered the bell on a huge steel cable, a dozen ships stirred the surface.

Nearby was the huge bulk of the cruiser Brooklyn, and almost alongside was a sister ship of the Squalus, the Sculpin. Nearby too were many tugs and active coast guard vessels.

From the decks of the Falcon a shout broke from the rescue crew. Echoing shouts came from other vessels.

Lieut. Nichols brought word to his superiors that 25 men were still safe and breathing below, but still 27 others apparently had been trapped in the flooded after compartments.

"Little hope is held that they are alive," said an official navy statement issued soon after.

Five, however, a naval officer announced to news-men.

"There has been a mistake. We have found one more man alive," he said. William David Boulton, seaman, from Luton, Iowa, first listed among the probable dead, but later brought to the surface on the second ascent of the diving bell. Thus the list of probable dead dropped from 27 to 26.

Riel Descendants Hail Their Majesties

(By CHARLES GUNNING, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

WINNIPEG, May 24—(CP)—When King George and Queen Elizabeth rolled along the crowded parade route in the city today, the Riel family whose ancestors twice led rebellions in Western Canada.

It was the family of Honore Riel, nephew of Louis Riel, French-Indian who incited Metis and Indians to revolt in Manitoba in 1885-70 and in Saskatchewan in 1885.

From their vantage point, the five children of Louis Riel's nephew waved their flags and pointed excitedly as they passed. Mrs. Riel, who had them with her, had them dressed in the British Monarchs.

After the procession passed, the 41-year-old Honore started back with his family for their home on the banks of the Red River—the same house in which Louis Riel was born in 1844.

Canada from Montreal in 1869. Riel's post office is now situated in the house and Honore is the postmaster. He is now in any other outlying office, with public notices on the walls and pen and ink handy for customers. Back of the picture in the kitchen is a colored picture of King George and Queen Elizabeth.

Riel smiled quietly when the picture of the Majesties was noticed and, with a note of pride in his voice, he asked:

"Would you like to see Louis' coffin?"

He led the way to a cupboard. Inside was a well-preserved plain wooden box, standing up on end. In this coffin, he explained, Louis' body had been brought from Regina to Winnipeg for burial after the Saskatchewan insurrection failed.

Tax Would Conflict With Trade Agreements

OTTAWA, May 23—(CP)—The British government has declined to occur in the imposition of an excise tax and customs duties on vegetable oils, Finance Minister Dunnington told the House of Commons today.

In the budget speech Mr. Dunnington disclosed the tax and duties had been recommended by the tariff board but consent of the British government to their enactment would be necessary because they would conflict with the Empire trade agreements. The British government was asked for its consent and declined on May 17. Consent to publish the correspondence was only obtained today.

Mr. Chester Champion was a business visitor to Summerside on Monday.

Mr. Oliver Bryanton was a recent visitor to Summerside on business.

Salt Fish Board Proposal Is Criticised

(By The Canadian Press)

OTTAWA, May 24—The Government's salt fish board proposal ran into sharp criticism from A. W. Neill (Ind. Comox-Alberni) today as Fisheries Minister Michaud sought second reading of the bill.

Mr. Neill, a veteran defender of the rights of Pacific Coast fishermen, agreed some aid should be given men trying to hang onto a "drying industry" (salt fish) but he held bounties was not a solution to the problem.

At the same time, he urged the Government to be frank and admit the bill was for the advantage of the fisherman.

He also pointed out that the bill was for the advantage of the fisherman, instead of hindering it might apply to British Columbia fishermen.

Mr. Michaud explained the bill provided for the setting up of a central board to direct marketing and processing of salt fish. That board could give direct aid and might act as export agent for individuals.

He quoted resolutions and letters from fishermen's associations urging help in disposing of their surplus catch. Salting or drying fish was the only way they had to deal with their surplus, he said, and they could not sell their salt fish, they did not prosper.

Help had also been urged by the fisheries committee of the Halifax Board of Trade, which has always taken an interest in the problem. "I don't think so," he said. "I don't think so," he said.

Mr. Michaud said the board's chief work would be in rehabilitating the export trade in dried fish. The fresh fish branch of the industry had not run into such widespread competition from other countries. The department had tried to increase the domestic consumption of fish and to expand the export market.
