I sure work better after a good lunch

'WHEN I have to carry my lunch to work I am always thankful my wife bakes bread with REGAL Flour. No other bread I've ever tasted is so satisfying, and believe me that's very important when a man's doing heavy work. My wife says it's because REGAL has more solid nourishment in it than ordinary flour. Believe me, REGAL makes bread that tastes better, too.'

POTATO PICKING is in full swing in Red Point district. Farmers report a good crop also a lot of rot. The severe cases of rot are the ones which will yield the best surplus. Those colonies will be the ones which survive the winter best and which, in turn, will be best prepared to withstand the test of winter. It pays to lay the foundation well.

That Body of Pours By James W. Barton, M.D.

POISON IVY 'Poison ivy is one of the first of the vines to take on the attractive reddish hue. Unsuspecting Nature lovers often are inclined to pick it for decorative purposes but the little rhyme 'leave three, let it be' is the better part of valor here. The fruit of the poison ivy is about the size of a small pea, pale green in color before it becomes ripe, and poisonous at this stage. When ripe it becomes cream-colored and is no longer poisonous becoming an attractive food for crows, woodpeckers, and other birds.'

I am quoting from Michigan Public Health which so often gives timely health hints to its readers. Poisoning results when parts of the body come in contact with the oily sap of the ivy plant. The substance from the leaves or broken stem sticks to the skin but the actual irritation may not make itself known until from two to seven days later.

The first symptoms include a burning, itching sensation of the skin. This may be followed by the appearance of a red rash on the part which has been in contact with the milky sap. The poisoning may never be more severe than this or it may develop into all parts of the body if irritated by continual scratching.

While most individuals may have some degree of ivy poisoning if they are against it, it is believed that only about one in eighteen is badly poisoned.

The first treatment for ivy poisoning is a thorough scrubbing of the part with laundry soap and hot water as the soap dissolves the oily sap. Water alone will not dissolve the fluid; excessive rubbing or scratching spreads the infection. A solution of salicylic acid and application of carbor oil—water, linseed oil equal parts—shortens the length of the attack. They require the services of the physician.

'Education of children and adults enables them to recognize the plant, cutting it away from public resorts and highways, and careful avoidance of it in the woods, will prevent many a sad aftermath of a happy holiday in the country.'

Wintering Bees

(Experimental Farms News) The foundation for next summer's honey crop will be laid this autumn. Colonies which are in good condition and are headed by a good queen in the spring are the ones which will yield the best surplus. Those colonies will be the ones which survive the winter best and which, in turn, will be best prepared to withstand the test of winter. It pays to lay the foundation well.

At Kapuskasing where is located the Dominion Experimental Station for Northern Ontario, bees often have their last good autumn flight in September and their first spring flight near the end of April, states M. J. Rowland, Apiarist of the Station. That long winter confinement is a severe test of their endurance and longevity. However, in spite of the long period when no brood is raised it has been proved that colonies can survive these long winters and be in excellent condition in the spring.

Factors essential for good wintering are: Strong colonies of young healthy bees; Ample stores in the hive during both autumn and winter seasons; and Healthful living conditions with adequate protection from cold.

Young bees are procured by having good queens with ample stores in the hive during the autumn. In cold weather bees are kept healthy to a great extent by keeping the hive interior dry and free from mildew. This is secured through protection and ventilation.

Stores should be given in ample time to allow for any necessary evaporating and ripening. If syrup is fed, however, the last of it should not be given until all brood has emerged from the combs, leaving room for the syrup to be stored.

Healthful living conditions for bees during the winter are more difficult to describe. A bee cellar should be cool, dark and well ventilated. Hives should have covers removed, entrances open and be placed on firm stands or supports so that the bees are not disturbed by any shaking or vibration. Mice and other disturbers of the bees should be kept at a minimum. Bees cannot thrive on foul air in a 'warm' dungeon.

When wintering bees outside, all parts of the case or wrapping should be secure and snug to avoid shaking or rattling by the wind. The bees should be protected from at least the north and west winds. A good covering of snow is a big help. In northern districts where the temperatures are too low for bee activity to manage the air via the entrance, some provision for upward ventilation, such as a quilt of porous material, seems to be necessary. Mice are not so likely to nest in the vicinity of the hives and disturb the bees if the grass is cut. In short peace and comfort are primary factors in successfully wintering bees.
