SMILES

A CLASP FOR THE HAIR

Janet: I'm going to the ball as a nymph of the mountains. Where do I get a costume?
Mrs.: Well, the jeweler ought to be to fix you up for that.

OVER THE COMIC SHEET

Mr.: Can you see this joke about me?
Mrs.: No—I guess it's something you have to feel.

YOU SAY YOUR HUSBAND HAS WONDERFUL TASTE?

Yes. He loves me and hates my cooking.

WOULDN'T GAMBOL IF HE DID

"And what is your reason for not gambling?"
"I'm not able to gambol after 10."

WAS STILL BOSS

Well, I suppose you're still boss your own home?
"Why, of course. I am—the family is still away at the shore."

GETTING GOOD.

Washington, Aug. 5.—Figures made public by the Department of Commerce showing that England is closing prisons on account of a decrease in crime made a striking comparison with the increase of crime in the United States. More than twenty prisons in England and Wales, practically a third of the total, have been closed since 1914. In all parts of the United States prisons are overflowing. Tax dodgers, auto thieves and bootleggers. Department of Justice say, are responsible for the increase in the Federal prisons.

MAY SEYMOUR FOOT LOOSE

by BEATRICE BURTON ONEA

MAY SEYMOUR, whose husband, DR. JOHN SEYMOUR, killed himself because of her love affair with JIM CAREWE, returns to her home town after a year's absence. Heavily veiled, she comes late one fall night to the home of her lawyer, DICK GREGORY, and GLORIA, his wife. She tells them how the story of Dr. John's suicide has cast a shadow over her life. And so she has made up her mind to "heel out" and go to Europe where no one will know her story. She asks ULYSSES X. FORGAN, a wealthy widower who is in the real estate business, to sell her house. Forgan advises her to live in it and face the people who have slandered her. But May says she wants to be footloose.

She tells Dick to sell her stocks and bonds for whatever they will bring. All she wants, she explains, is enough money to dress the part of a wealthy widow and "land" a rich husband.

A week later, with $8000 in her handbag, she goes down to Atlantic City for a short rest before sailing for Europe. There she meets MRS. CARLOTTA ROLKING, a gossamer widow, and her friends, HERBERT WATERBURY and DAN SPRAGUE.

They all go to ADOREE'S little supper club, and are joined by FRANKIE LEE, ADOREE'S hostess. Waterbury explains that such women as Frankie earn their living by dancing with unattached men in these places.

Waterbury asks May to let him take care of her $8000 for her, but May refuses to give it up. However, she promises to put it in the hotel safe. Waterbury makes love to her, and she feels sure that she is in love with him.

The morning after the party at ADOREE'S she buys a $500 black pearl ring on her way to breakfast at a Broadway restaurant. There she meets Frankie Lee, and Frankie tells her that being a "hostess" is the most terrible job in the world.

THE STORY

"Before I tell you anything about myself, I'd like to ask you a question," Frankie Lee began. "How old do you usually get?"

May narrowed her eyes and looked at the face opposite her as an artist might have studied his model.

Frankie's pale skin was drawn around the orbits of the eyes. The eyes themselves were old. They looked as if they had seen everything there was to see, and had grown tired from too much strain.

Below the ear and under the chin there was a tiny slackening of the flesh. And while there was no gray in the smooth black hair, it did not have the live look of healthy hair.

"Well," May said truthfully, "I should say you are thirty-four or five."

"Twenty-eight!" There was a kind of bitter triumph in Frankie's voice as she answered. "In another five years I'll look about forty."

May could only shake her head.

"I was on the stage when I first came to New York from my home town in Ohio," Frankie said. "ADOREE was in vauville then, and I was with her. Then she started her midnight supper-club in New York and it was such a success that she gave up the stage for good."

"I remember the place," May Seymour broke in. "I went there one night three or four years ago with my husband."

"Well, ADOREE noticed that a great many men came alone to the club," Frankie went on. "And she hired me and two or three other girls she knew to sit at their tables and talk to them—entertain them, you know."

"I'll say this for ADOREE, . . . she's like a mother to us. She always says that we get home safely. And she's made a rule that none of us meets the men patrons outside the club. . . ."

Frankie's dark eyes grew darker.

"We set our tips just as waiters do, you know," she went on. "Sometimes a party will give a girl as much as $50 if she's been bright and entertaining. Of course, a lot of men are tightwads and think $10 is enough for talking your head off and dancing your feet off for a whole evening."

"There's one man who comes down here sometimes with some of the members of his law firm. And he gave me this."

She held out her arm to show May the diamond bracelet upon it. "That is, he gave me one like it," she said. "I had to pawn the real one a while ago, when I was stony broke. But I'll get it back, I suppose."

She gave May a narrow look.

"I suppose you're wondering what sort of a girl I am, to take presents from a man," she said calmly. And, as a matter of fact, May was wondering that very thing.

"Well, I'm just as decent as I was when I left Mt. Vernon, Ohio, ten years ago," Frankie went on. "But just the same, I figure that if anybody's around passing out diamond bracelets, I've a perfect right to one or two of them myself."

She looked meditatively at May for a moment and her eyes softened.

"Ever been in Mt. Vernon?" she asked.

"May shook her head.

"Prettiest little country town in the world," Frankie said quietly. "All green lawns and white houses . . . and church bells on Sunday night. You know the kind of town I mean, don't you?"

"Well, I sang in the choir of our church, and everybody said I had a voice. So I made up my mind to go to New York to go on the stage. . . . Landed there when I was eighteen. . . . green as grass, just a fool little kid with a big ambition. And when I finally landed a job with ADOREE'S company I thought I'd licked the world."

May was in demure gray when she met Waterbury in the lobby. Such a terrible way of living why don't you go back to the stage?"

"Well, I did try going back once," Frankie said, gloomily turning her glass around and around in her hands. "But there's so much more money in this hostess job."

Vernon and married the town plumber I'd been happy. No, you needn't smile! I really was engaged to a plumber back there. Jay P. Jones is his name. . . . nicest fellow I ever knew. Say, he'd look like a prince beside these bracelet-buyers that drape themselves over the cabaret tables."

"Well, if that's the way you feel about him, why don't you go home and marry him?" May asked, sensibly. "That's the smart thing to do, it seems to me."

Frankie shook her head. "No," she said. "I went home last year for a couple of weeks. I called him up and he came to see me—once. I waited for ten days, but he never came again. I guess he was afraid of me—the way I talked, and the kind of clothes I wore. They're pretty straight-faced out in Mt. Vernon, you know. It's a nine o'clock town, all right!"

She got up and held out her hand to May.

"Forgive me for hanging my hand-back story on you, won't you?" she asked, smiling. "I really don't know what made me tell it to you. . . . I usually keep my troubles to myself!"

May pressed her hand. "Perhaps it'll all come out right in the end, like a fairy tale," she said. "You know. . . . that and so they married and lived happily ever after."

"A hard look came into Frankie's eyes.

"I'm afraid not," she answered. "My man's going around with my younger sister, now, they tell me. She's a sweet little kid. . . . the kind of a girl I would have been, maybe, if I'd stayed home where I belonged. A well-bred girl, no use crying over spilled milk, is there?"

And she was gone.

May sat there at the little blue table, staring out at the ocean, her chin cupped in her hands.

"What would ten years' knocking around the world do to her, she wondered.

. . . Ah, but she wasn't going to

May was in demure gray when she met Waterbury in the lobby.

"We set our tips just as waiters do, you know," she went on. "Sometimes a party will give a girl as much as $50 if she's been bright and entertaining. Of course, a lot of men are tightwads and think $10 is enough for talking your head off and dancing your feet off for a whole evening."

"There's one man who comes down here sometimes with some of the members of his law firm. And he gave me this."

She held out her arm to show May the diamond bracelet upon it. "That is, he gave me one like it," she said. "I had to pawn the real one a while ago, when I was stony broke. But I'll get it back, I suppose."

"I suppose you're wondering what sort of a girl I am, to take presents from a man," she said calmly. And, as a matter of fact, May was wondering that very thing.

"Well, I'm just as decent as I was when I left Mt. Vernon, Ohio, ten years ago," Frankie went on. "But just the same, I figure that if anybody's around passing out diamond bracelets, I've a perfect right to one or two of them myself."

Spanish Peace Terms Offered

Abd-el-Krim

TANGIER, Aug. 5.—Spanish terms for peace with the Rif are as follows:

Abd-el-Krim must recognize the sovereignty of the Sultan and authority of the Khalifa of the Spanish zone. He must hand over all his artillery to the Spaniards. The Spaniards shall maintain a permanent fortified Spanish post at Alh. Abd-el-Krim's headquarters in the Rif. All Spanish prisoners must be liberated. In return the Spanish Directory will grant the Rif local independent government, with Spanish functionaries. Rifians are permitted to have a small army, to be paid by the Spaniards, and will receive financial assistance for introduction of their local government.

CANADIAN ELECTED.

Montreal, Aug. 5.—For the first time in the history of the Royal Caledonian Curling Club of Scotland, and creating a precedent more than a century, a Canadian curler has been elected to the presidency by unanimous vote in the person of William C. Murray, past president of the Outg Curling Club and retiring president of the Canadian branch of the parent Scottish body. The honorary presidency of this organization was recently accepted by H. R. H. the Prince of Wales, another precedent, for royalty never before acted in this capacity.
