The French had formed with bayonets fixed in five short, thick lines, four white and one blue; the English stood with double-shotted guns in a long-stir-jointed thin red line. Level ground lay between. Had England advanced, history might have written itself differently. But England waited. France advanced. Jeems went with her. He was already hit. A shot had caught him in the shoulder, and blood ran down his arm and dripped from his fingers. He felt no pain, but a slumberous feeling was creeping over him as he staggered on with the lines. He saw Montcalm ride along the front of his men, cheering them on to victory; he noted the gold-embroidered green coat he wore, the polished cuirass at his breast, the white linen of his wrist-band, and he heard his voice as he asked, "Don't you want a little rest before you begin?" The answer, "We're never tired before a battle!" rose about him. Jeems' lips framed the words which were repeated like increasing blasts in a storm. But the sun was growing less bright to his eyes.

An advance of forty or fifty paces, then a pause, another advance, another pause, in the way regulars fought at that time on flat and open battlefields, and Jeems measured the distance between himself and the red line of the British. At each halt he fired with his comrades, then loaded and advanced. The red line had broken precedent. It made no move to play its part in the prescribed routine of war, and continued to stand like a wall. Openings came in it where crimson blouses sank to the ground, but those who remained were unmoved and steadfast as they waited with their double-shotted guns. A tremor ran through the French, a thickening of men's breaths, a quickening of their heartbeats, a crumpling under strain while the melody of the bell stole softly over the Plains of Abraham.

They halted again less than a hundred paces away, and still England's thinning line did not fire. A man close to Jeems laughed as if nerves had cracked inside his head. Another gasped as if he had been struck. Jeems tried to hold himself erect. The weird sensation came over him that the armies were not going to fight, after all.

Then he heard his name. It was his mother calling him. He answered with a cry and would have swayed toward her if hands had not dragged him back. "Mad!" he heard a voice say. He dropped his gun as he tried to wipe the blindness from his eyes. Things cleared. There were the red line, the open space, sunlight—something passing. Those who lived did not forget what they saw. England took the story home with her. France gave it a little place in her history. For a few seconds men were not looking at death but at a dog. An old decrepit dog who limped as he walked, a dog with one foot missing.

Jeems made an effort to call. "Odd—Odd—"

"Forward!"

He marched with the others into the jaws of death, blind groping, straining to make the dog hear words which never passed his lips. There was no longer a day. No sun. No red wall before him. But his ears still caught the tramp of feet and the melody of the bell. These died in a roar, the roar of double-shotted guns. England fired at forty paces, and France went down in a shapeless mass of dead.

With the front line fell Jeems.

SWEET PEAS

To many the sweet pea is the favorite flower, but after a few unsuccessful trials we have too often given up its cultivation and depended upon our hard-earned money to provide an odd bouquet once in a while. This is unfortunate, as the sweet pea will thrive and produce wonderful bloom almost anywhere in the Dominion. Like most good things, only a little care is necessary. An early start is essential. Usually there comes a time in March or April when we can work a bit of our soil for a few days and it is then that we should plant the sweet pea which must get its growth while the weather is cool. Dig a trench a foot deep, and in the bottom put a few inches of well rotted manure or leaves, or any other decaying vegetable matter. Press this down well and add three inches of the best garden soil you can secure. Plant seed two inches apart and the same depth and as the plants develop, gradually fill in the trench level. This treatment encourages deep rooting in cool earth. Provide from three to five feet of climbing support in the form of brush, an old tennis net, strings or wire. The last is the poorest of the lot because it may cut tender growth or burn it when the weather turns warm. A little commercial fertilizer dissolved in water and carefully applied so that it will not actually touch the plants, is also advised. Cultivate thoroughly, soak with water in dry weather and you will have abundance of bloom from July until frost. Never allow the flowers to go to seed, or bloom will cease. A few special colors and new varieties will cause your neighbors to come and enquire and envy.

Declined To Comment On Recommendations

OTTAWA, July 19—(By The Canadian Press)—In view of the approaching discussions of the Economic Conference on wheat, members of the government declined last night to comment on the recommendations of the Government of Manitoba. The suggestion that a wheat quota by the United Kingdom would not help Canada is along the line of other advice from marketing experts it is understood.

TALLEST ORCHID IN WORLD

Naturalists in Southern Queensland have discovered the tallest orchid in the world. It grows to a height of forty-five feet and bears hundreds of beautiful flowers. One spike of flowers measures nearly six feet in length and a yard in width. The plant climbs by attaching little sucker-like roots to the boles of gum trees. It has no true leaves, but there are leaflike bracts at the nodes. Flowers are golden yellow, contrasting finely with a white, pink-marked labellum. The margins of the blossoms are daintily crisped.

The height limit of this orchid, Galeola foliata, was previously thought to be thirty feet.

HIS EXCURSIONS WERE SHORT AND HE WANDERED ALONE

When at last he was able to mingle with the disarmed populace and the crowds of soldiers in the streets, he was strangely unlike the old Jeems. He was badly wounded and realized that nothing less than a miraculous intervention which the nuns described to the mercy of God could have kept him beyond the reach of death. A ball had passed through his shoulder when three others struck him at the discharge of the English guns. That they had failed to kill him he did not accept as a blessing. The impression grew in him that he had been very close to his mother and Toimette and that fate not satisfied with his unhappiness had drawn him back from them. This thought established his belief that Odd's appearance as well as his mother's voice and the nearness of Toimette had been purely spiritual.

But whenever he saw a dog in the streets of Quebec he looked to see if one foot was missing.

His excursions were short and he wandered alone. He saw a number of his comrades, but they did not recognize him and he did not feel the impulse to let them know who he was. Flesh had dropped from his bones until he resembled one approaching death instead of escaping it. He walked with stooped shoulders. His eyes were sunken, and his hands, in one of which he carried a staff, were emaciated to the thinness of extreme age. The small interest life had held for him seemed to have shriveled with the strength of his body. The English rekindled the spark, his mother's English, the half of himself which he had tried to hate. They were not acting the part of conquerors. They were—unbelievably—friends. From the gallant Brigadier Murray to the commonest soldier, they were courteous, humane, generous, dividing their rations with the starved citizens, sharing their tobacco with them, helping without pay to build up ruined homes, each day working themselves deeper into the good will of those who had been cheated and despoiled by Governor Vaudreuil and his degenerate crowd and by the weakness of the king of France. Even the nuns and the priests welcomed them, men and women of God who for two hundred years had fought indefatigably for

SOME TIMELY HINTS ON POULTRY DISEASE CONTROL

The Pathological Division of the Health of Animals Branch of the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa, has just made available for distribution Bulletin 158, N.S., "Internal Parasites of Poultry," which embodies the latest results of research work in connection with poultry parasites.

A review of this bulletin discloses the following items of special interest:

Young birds suffer the most from parasites. Keep them away from adult birds, and on ground that has not been used by poultry for at least one year.

Don't overcook. This concentrates the parasites in a given area and increases the chances of infection.

Do not keep turkeys and chickens on the same ground. Turkeys carry gapeworms to chickens, and fowls carry the organisms of blackheads to turkeys in caecal worms or their eggs.

Infection by coccidia, roundworms or tapeworms is contracted through the mouth.

Eggs of worms are ineffective after they reach a certain stage of development; with tapeworms this requires that they be eaten by certain slugs, snails, beetles or flies, which are in turn eaten by poultry. One worm egg only produces one worm, but one coccidium gives rise to an enormous number of coccidia.

Coccidia develop to the infective stage very rapidly. Prompt disposal of infected droppings is the secret of success in outbreaks of coccidiosis.

Keep poultry manure covered, and the yards clear of trash or piles of weeds, straw or manure that might serve as the breeding place for flies or beetles.

Keep the yards dry. Fill in water holes. Fix leaky taps. Dryness is unfavorable for the development of worm eggs and coccidia.

Prevention is better than cure. A system of rotation whereby the same ground is not used for poultry the second time until the fourth year, will reduce losses from parasites to a minimum.

James Miles, of Shirley, England, celebrated his 101st birthday by making ladders, having been a ladder-maker for years.

New France. Honor and chivalry had come to conquer Quebec and had brought such friendship for its people that a British soldier was hanged in the public square for stealing from a resident of the town. (To Be Continued)

Subjects of Famous Literary Gems Meet

LONDON, July 20—(By The Canadian Press)—"Alice in Wonderland" and "Peter Pan" met recently at a literary gathering in London, they being the central figures thereat. "Alice" is Mrs. Hargreaves, the original of Lewis Carroll's immortal story, and "Peter" is Peter Davies, publisher, the original of Sir James Barrie's famous play, "Peter Pan." The occasion of the meeting was the opening by Mrs. Hargreaves of the Lewis Carroll Centenary Exhibition, arranged in a bookshop in Oxford Street, and during the ceremony "Peter" sat at "Alice's" left.

Mrs. Hargreaves, a dainty little figure in brown, with smiling eyes peeping from beneath a shady hat, sat with one hand resting on a thick stick. The gathering was representative of literature, the Church, the Stage, Art, Politics, the Universities and Sport. Around the room were dozens of relics of Lewis Carroll—Charles Lutwidge Dodgson—the great literary playmate of Mrs. Hargreaves' childhood. Ranged on shelves were books on logic and trigonometry by the learned Mr. Dodgson and on the other side were flippant sketches and satires from the pen of the puckish creator of "Alice." There are dozens of editions of "Alice in Wonderland," including the rare first edition, which was called in after about 20 copies had been issued.

A special matinee was given at the St. James' Theatre in aid of the Lewis Carroll Memorial, which is to take the form of a "Lewis Carroll" Ward for children in St. Mary's Hospital. The ward is to be named "Wonderland Ward."

Madame Alanova, Sir Gerald du Maurier, Seymour Hicks, Miss Violet Loraine, Miss Alicia Markova and Miss Peggy Wood appeared at the matinee, and Miss Loraine auctioned a first edition of "Alice in Wonderland."

PAY TRIBUTE TO HER HUSBAND IN WILL

"My husband has been my guide and uplift in all things, and I am eternally grateful for his love and companionship."

This tribute is contained in the will of Mrs. Marie Cooks Hickey, of Richmond, Virginia, who left an $80,000 estate in England. Her husband is the sole executor and beneficiary of her will. A codicil adds: "God bless and keep you (her husband), my darling, and may the years bring you every happiness. There is nothing in life that you have denied me, and I find no words of gratefulness for all that you have been to me, precious—Your loving old missus."

She has just passed through Auckland. "When I set out on this walk," Miss James said, "I weighed

Clara, a small baboon, the heroine of many experiments was placed on a table bearing five boxes. They were identical in size and shape. One was red, the rest were grey. The four grey boxes were locked; the red one, which was not locked, concealed a banana and displayed a red light.

Clara faced the five boxes, and, with hardly a moment's hesitation, walked over and opened the red box containing a banana. The position of the box among the other four was changed scores of times, Clara being blindfolded during the changes. Nevertheless, she picked out the red box every time.

POINT DE ROCHE W. I.

The regular monthly meeting of Point de Roche W. I. was held on Tuesday, July 5th, with eight members and two visitors present. The meeting opened by "O Canada" and roll call was responded by recites. Minutes and financial statement of last meeting were read and approved. Report of committees were then heard and six and Programme Committees reappointed for next month.

It was decided to purchase white wash for outside of school, also paint and paper for the inside. Arrangements were made to have seats repaired before opening. Miss Lottie Garrett and Miss Dora Doyle were appointed delegates to the Annual Convention in Charlottetown.

The programme, which was a very enjoyable one, consisted of violin selections by Mrs. Fred McCormack and accordion selection by Mrs. Ronald O'Hanley.

After adjournment, a delicious lunch was served by the hostess assisted by Mrs. J. D. McInnis, who invited the members to her home for August meeting. Roll call was answered by "Original Verse."

A farmer, visiting his son's college and wandered into a chemistry class, saw some students busy with retorts and test tubes.

"What are you trying to do?" he asked.

"We're endeavoring," replied one of the students, "to discover or invent a universal solvent."

"What's that?" asked the farmer.

"A liquid that will dissolve anything."

"That's a great idea," agreed the farmer. "When you find it, what are you going to keep it in?"
