TAKING THE CENSUS IN ENGLAND, GERMANY, FRANCE

It will not be many months now before the Dominion's decennial census will be taken. This fact lends interest to an article on census-taking to be found in Pearson's Magazine, in the course of which the systems employed in England, Germany and France, are contrasted with that followed in the United States. The following are conducted on a most economical basis, whereas in the United States, the securing of census returns is made the opportunity for working a huge political graft. From this danger we are not at all free in Canada.

The English system is first explained in detail. Official announcement is made that on a certain hour of a certain day, the census will be taken. The day is usually Saturday, and the hour is either midnight or 11 p.m. A late hour Saturday night is selected, because even those who have been away during the week usually come home to stay over Sunday. Printed circulars, prepared by the government, are sent by the police to the head of every family that lives in a private dwelling, to the owner of each apartment house or lodging, and to the owner of each hotel. These circulars contain blank spaces in which the citizens are required to record every fact about themselves that the government desires to learn. The householder at whose home such a blank is left is warned that at the hour the census is taken, he is to be under his roof, together with information concerning the probable whereabouts of those domiciled with him who are temporarily absent. The owners of hotels, apartment houses and lodgings are themselves required—and under heavy penalties too, for disobedience—to see that their guests or tenants both promptly and properly fill in the blank forms.

While the work of preparing data is proceeding within the doors, the police are engaged in rounding up stragglers in the streets. A man is seen in the shadows, walking toward what may be his home. A policeman stops him, taking his name and address. Another policeman boards a car filled with passengers. Every passenger must tell who he is and where he lives. All of the required information concerning these persons has probably already been written out in the place which they live, by the late-hour travellers, as a check against omission, are nevertheless interrogated. Sometimes a frisky Englishman, who, for reasons of his own, does not want to figure in the census, tries to evade the government by riding around all night in a cab. Ten chances to one he will not succeed in his purpose. Cabs are stopped and searched as our street cars or pedestrians. The government wants to know. The government will not be denied.

All over England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales this proceeding takes place at the same hour. Rural police have carried the blanks to the peasants' cottages, as the metropolitan police have borne the circulars to the homes of the dwellers in the cities. A day or two later—perhaps Monday or Tuesday—the blanks are gathered up. But they are not collected by specially appointed enumerators working by the grace of politicians, for extra wages, but by the police, as a part of their regular work for their regular pay. In Germany, a census is taken whenever the Bundestag gives the order, usually every three or four years. As in England, circulars are printed and distributed by the police. But they are not collected by the police. The burgomaster issues a call for volunteers. So many offer to help that the aid of all cannot be accepted. School teachers, unem- ployed clerks, retired business men and others, receive their services without promise or hope of a mark or a penny as compensation. "In Germany," says a German official, "it is considered an honor to respond to any call that the Government may make for gratuitous public service. The French system is perhaps the best organized and most efficient of the three.

France, at all times, has the name and address of each of its people, as well as the names and addresses of all travelers who are sojourning within its borders. Within a week from the time a child is born, its name must be reported to the police. The birth-report must also give the names of the child's parents, together with their address. French officials, thereafter, carefully look after that name and address. If the child's parents move, they must give due notice. If the child dies, notice must also be given. If the child be a boy, his name, when he becomes of voting age, is placed in the roll of eligible voters. If he removes from the country, his name will be crossed from the records. So long as he is in France, his name and address are kept. Only death or emigration can end the record.

It is therefore a simple matter for France to take a census. Knowing the names and the abiding places of her people, she knows whom to reach and where to reach them. Even the aid of the police is not required. The whole proceeding is carried on by mail without postage. The chief civil official in the smallest political division—approximating one of our townships—mails the necessary blanks to all of those persons who are domiciled within his district, together with envelopes in which the completed documents may be returned. To him without the payment of postage. The official of this division makes up the totals and forwards them to his superior officer, whose position is comparable, let us say, to that of an American county clerk. The officials whom we should call county clerks report to others whom we should call governors, and in this way, all of the facts of the census are finally concentrated in Paris, where they are prepared for publication by regular government employees and published at the bare cost of white paper, press and bindery work.

Fifteen Years of Agony

"Fruit-a-lives" Promptly Cured Him After Doctors Had Failed To Give Relief.

CHARLES BARRETT, Esq.
Harbor au Bonche,
Antigonish Co., N.S., March 24, 1909.
"I wish to express my sincere appreciation of the great benefit I received from taking 'Fruit-a-lives.' I suffered from Biliousness and Dyspepsia for fifteen years and I consulted physicians and took many kinds of ordinary medicine, but got no relief. I was in miserable health all the time and nothing did me any good. I read the testimonial of Archibald McKeechies, of Ottawa, and I decided to try 'Fruit-a-lives.' I have taken a number of boxes of 'Fruit-a-lives,' but before I had taken one box I felt better and now am entirely well. I am thankful to be well after fifteen years suffering, and I am willing to have this statement published for the sake of other sufferers, and to them I strongly recommend 'Fruit-a-lives.'"

WATSON TELLS A STORY

By J. L. HARBOUR

(Copyright, by J. B. Lippincott Co.)

Watson likes to tell a story, and he is aware of the fact that he tells one uncommonly well when he can tell it in his own way. But this privilege is not always accorded him when Mrs. Watson is around, and she was with him at a delightful little dinner party the Rayburns were giving the other evening. Watson was in his best story-telling mood and he had a capital new story to tell. He was sure that no one at the table but Mrs. Watson had heard it. He awaited his opportunity, and during a lull in the general conversation he began with:

"Oh, by the way, I heard a capital little story at the club the other evening. It is a new Hebrew story Charley Dwight told me. He said that—"

"Why, Mr. Watson, I thought it was Harry Ross who told you that story?" interrupted Mrs. Watson.

"No, my dear, it was Dwight who told me. He said—"

"I am quite sure that you said it was Harry Ross who told you the story when you told me. Is it the story about the two Jews at a dinner-party, and one of them—"

"Yes, yes, it is that story, and Dwight said that—"

"Remember very distinctly that you said it was Mr. Ross. You know you said that he—"

"Well, well, perhaps I did say Ross when I meant Dwight. Ross was present. But it don't matter which one told the story."

"Of course not, only it is best to be accurate."

"Dwight said that—"

"You mean Ross."

"Well, Ross said that a couple of Sheenys were—"

"Don't say 'Sheenys,' dear, it sounds so distasteful."

Could Not Sleep.

DOCTOR SAID HEART AND NERVES WERE RESPONSIBLE.

There is many a man and woman tossing night after night upon a sleepless bed.

Their eyes do not close in the sweet and refreshing repose that comes to those whose heart and nerves are right. Some constitutional disturbance, worry or disease has so debilitated and irritated the nervous system, that it cannot be quieted and causes nightmare, bad dreams, starting in the sleep, twitching of the muscles, restlessness, etc.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are a specific for all people troubled in this way. They have a soothing and calming effect on the nervous system.

Mrs. Calvin Stark, Rosmore, Ont., writes: "About two years ago I began to be troubled with a smothering sensation at night when I would lie down, and would have to sit up and rub my limbs, they would become so numb. My doctor said my heart and nerves were responsible. I saw Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills advertised and got a box to try them. I took three boxes and can now lie down and sleep without the light burning and can rest well. I can recommend them highly to all nervous and run down women."

Price, 50 cents per box or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Sir:
If the "happy-go-lucky-slap-it-on-a-press-and-let-'er-go" kind of advertising you are using is doing you some good doesn't it seem reasonable to suppose that "something different"—bright, convincing, thought-out and mailed regularly "direct" to your list will prove of much greater value?

FOR YOUR Stomach's Sake

You should keep Mother Seigel's Syrup by you. It soothes and strengthens, cures wind, pain, cramps, colic and all forms of indigestion.

Take Mother Seigel's Syrup

"I don't mean any disrespect, and—"

"It is always best to say what one means, and 'Sheeny' is not only disrespectful, but it is vulgar."

"Well, these two Jews, Goldstein and Rosenbaum, were at a dinner-party, and—"

"You said their names were Schloss and Strauss when you told me the story."

"Oh, the names don't matter."

"I suppose not, but, as I say, it is best to be accurate."

"Dwight said that these Jews were at a dinner-party, and—"

"I thought it was a public banquet, dear?" said Mrs. Watson, gently.

"Oh, well, what's the difference? Anyhow—"

"There is a good deal of difference between a dinner-party and a public banquet."

"Very well, call it a banquet, then."

"I wouldn't if it wasn't a banquet. 'Anhow, there were solid silver spoons on the table, and—"

"Then it must have been a dinner-party. One never sees solid silver at a public banquet."

"I didn't say it was a public banquet."

"I didn't say that you did, my dear boy."

"Well, the point of the story is that during the progress of the dinner Goldstein took one of the solid silver spoons and slipped it into his shoe, and—"

"I don't see how he could have done that unobserved," remarked Mrs. Watson.

"He did, according to the way the story goes, and—"

"It don't seem reasonable."

"Lots of good stories are unreasonable. Rosenbaum saw Goldstein put the spoon into his shoe, and—"

"Oh, it wasn't that way. You are getting ahead of the story. When you told it to me you said—"
