MADE 30 ATTEMPTS TO END HER LIFE

NEW YORK, Sept. 14.—When Mrs. Grace Genschler, 23, of 741 East Eleventh street, Manhattan, was sentenced at White Plains yesterday to the psychiatric section of Bedford Reformatory, County Judge Young was told she had made thirty attempts to end her life and that her arms are a mass of scars from cuts and burns inflicted with suicidal intent. A deputy sheriff called at her home last June to arrest her on a grand larceny charge and she jumped out of a third story window, receiving injuries which kept her in Bellevue Hospital for eight weeks. She made several attempts to end her life while in the hospital, it was said.

A HUSBAND

TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XXI.

As every one is aware, people know nothing about each other until they live together. Marcia told John that all her women friends just raved about her mother and thought them so fortunate to have her for a long visit. John said nothing. He wouldn't hurt Marcia's feelings, yet he would gladly have dispensed with Mrs. Vane's society.

Now John Aldrich would have been far happier could he have felt more friendly toward Marcia's mother. He would have tried more earnestly had it not been that she had not only abetted Marcia in her extravagant notions, but put ideas in her head.

Mrs. Vane made casual references regarding what she considered a man should have and be before he married; what a wife had a right to expect nowadays. While he expected to dance attendance upon both Mrs. Vane and Marcia continually, John felt alone, wandering through a dark valley of debt and unsatisfying endeavor.

John had sworn to himself that never would he allow himself and Marcia to get in debt beyond what he could pay each month. But when Mrs. Vane had been with them a few weeks he found that unless he were to be constantly making himself obnoxious in a controversy every time he was in the house, he must give way. Consequently he piled on debt. Most of what he earned was going for clothes for Marcia for parties, dinners and bridge, theatres and concerts, and to entertain Marcia's mother, who always sided with Marcia in every question broached between her and John.

One afternoon when John entered his home he felt at once that the air was fairly surcharged with something ominous. All through dinner both Marcia and her mother seemed full of a suppressed emotion. He asked no questions; was too much of a coward to do so, he told himself bitterly.

"I have a surprise for you, John dear," Marcia remarked after they had left the table and were sipping their coffee in the living room—a custom Mrs. Vane had installed with her coming.

"Yes?" "Mother and I found the dearest apartment today, the nicest, sunniest rooms, and a duck of an enfilade, so different from this old-fashioned hall."

Marcia hesitated for a moment, then as John said nothing she went on. She did not, perhaps, know that

Which Would You Rather Be?

50 and Feel 30 OR 30 and Feel 50

Redmac, the New Tonic Will Do It.

Of course one would rather be 50 and feel 30, but how many are there who are just the opposite? Why, because they are suffering with dyspepsia, Loss of Energy, no ambition, in fact they feel all in, something is wrong. We tell you Redmac, the great Tonic made from valuable Roots, Herbs and Barks, contain just the medicine to brace you up. You will be surprised and pleased. You will feel younger—stronger. In fact you will feel fine. Redmac is sold by one druggist in every town.

he couldn't speak, or did not dare to, so fearful was he of the inevitable argument with Mrs. Vane siding and abetting Marcia.

"It is nearer downtown, too; so nearer your work. Then there is the nicest garage near. It is big enough when we have a larger car. It is sort of a private garage—only a few cars in it. I talked with the man, and he said he would take my coupe."

"I am afraid you will find that a place such as you describe is too expensive for us," John said at last found his voice.

"Oh, it isn't expensive at all, is it?" "Not considering what one gets. And there was only this one apartment, so I took it and—"

"You mean you took the refusal?" "No! I mean I rented it. Mother loaned me the first month's rent, and I was afraid to wait a minute. He said there had been several looking at it. You see, it is a new house, so very much in demand."

"How much is the rent?" John kept his voice even only by the greatest effort.

"It is a little more than here but it is worth it, every penny of it! And such a lovely good room for mother."

"So sunny and—"

"How much is the rent?" "Only one hundred and fifty a month. Mother thinks it wonderful cheap as rents go in New York."

Dully John wondered just why Mrs. Vane thought one hundred and fifty dollars a cheap rent. In the town where she lived the best rent he could get for his flat was more than fifty dollars, if for that, finally he said:

"It's too much, Marcia. I can't afford it. Fifty more than we are paying half again as much. It is out of the question."

"But I have taken it! And I stopped and told our landlord this place was for rent; that we were moving out the first. It's lucky we only renewed for a year. You remember you wanted to make it two years. But I knew well enough I wouldn't live here longer than that year."

"I don't see—"

"For heavens sake, don't commence making a poor mouth, and before mother!" Marcia interrupted. "I told the agent you would come in the morning and sign the lease. I gave your firm as reference. The agent said it was a wonderful firm, and any one they recommended was O. K. with him."

John groaned—inaudibly. He was beaten. Probably by this time his firm had been asked about him and knew he was renting an apartment beyond his means.

"SORES HEAL QUICKLY.—Have you a persistent sore that refuses to heal? Then, try Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil in the dressing. It will stop the sloughing, carry away for the new skin. It is a recognised healer among oils, and numbers of people can certify that it healed where properly applied."

How Ex-Kaiser Lives In Holland

About the only thing that is democratic about the Ex-Kaiser's life at Doorn is his wood-chopping. Otherwise he maintains a court that is a miniature of Potsdam. Why he chops wood nobody knows, since it is hard work, but the Kaiser is said to be vigorous physically, and having specially trained muscles used in felling trees, can work for hours at this exercise without apparent fatigue. Having chopped down the trees he loves to saw out a section of the trunk, and in his spare time of smooth carve this with the capital "W" that used to carry so much terror in the old days. These finished slabs he gives as souvenirs to his more favored visitors. It also pleases him to throw a log which he himself has prepared, on the open fire, which is kept burning Winter and Summer. Another favorite occupation is talking. When his guests are former officers, as often they are, military maps are produced and the Great War is fought over again, the Ex-Kaiser commenting on what might have been except for what was. He clings to the idea that the German armies were never defeated and that the German disaster was wholly due to traitors at home.

William is Pious

Every morning at 6.30 he rises, and an hour later walks down to the offices of the court-marshal, a gaudy building near the gate of the estate which was designed by Wilhelm personally. There he inspects everything as though he were visiting a barracks. Then he takes an hour's stroll about the grounds, returning to breakfast. At 9.30 there are prayers, which all the servants are obliged to attend the Ex-Kaiser reading the services. Since the death of the former Kaiser, special prayers are said for her. It is said that Wilhelm has recovered from the blow the death of his wife caused him. At that time fears were entertained that he might do away with himself, and his daughter did not dare leave him. Now he seems to have become resigned, and has resumed the round that he followed while she lived.

The Exile Woodman

Garbed in old clothes, he begins his wood-sawing at ten o'clock and works steadily for an hour. Then he refreshes himself with a bottle of Rhine wine, after which he resumes his work until 12.30. Then he takes a bath and has a frugal lunch at 1 o'clock. After which he retires for sleep. In the afternoon he spends most of his time, when season and weather are favorable in his large garden. Of late he has taken a great interest in flower culture and at a recent show in Doorn he won two second prizes for English sweet peas he had grown himself.

The Dinner and the Uniform

At 5.30 William Hohenzollern dons the full dress uniform of a Prussian General, wearing all its medals and decorations, excepting those, of course, which he indignantly handed back to the British Ambassador to Germany on the eve of war. He walks round in this outfit until 7.30 when a great dinner gong is sounded and William marches in great state to the dining room. When there are no guests the Hofmarschall which is the title of Gen Von Gonthard, who manages the house and estate for him, has to sit by and listen to his master's speeches. Usually one of the adjutants keeps him company. The dinner is not in accordance with the pomp in which it is served, for it consists merely of a soup, meat, vegetables, a sweet fruit and a single glass of wine. There is extra wine served late at night when he has military guests, and sometimes it is far past midnight when the party breaks up.

Ambitions Abandoned

While William believes in a considerable state, he does not spend nearly as much at Doorn as he did at Amerongen, but whether this is due to the fact that he has less money or whether he regarded his stay at Amerongen as a mere interlude and decided not to abate his imperial state while he remained there is not known. It seems certain, however, that he has made up his mind that Doorn will be his home for the rest of his life. He has no illusions that he ever will be restored to the throne of Prussia, but he believes that some day or other a monarchy will be restored in Germany. He is said to be on better terms with the Ex-Kaiser Prince than formerly. The younger man frequently visits his father and they walk and saw wood together. Before the death of the Kaiserin, the son, on the occasion of his visits, spent nearly all his time there with his mother or speeding round the place in his car.

Italy May Conquer Africa By Airplane

ROME Sept. 14.—Just as the railway proved the great advance guard of civilization for the entire western portion of the United States, so must the airplane become the great advance guard for the civilization of Africa.

Convinced of the truth of this, the Italian Ministry of Colonies as well as those of the War and Navy, are making an ever-increasing use of aviation in the development of Italy's African colonies. The same is being done equally by France and Spain in the development of Morocco, Tunis and other African possessions.

Italy's Dark Continent colonies include Tripoli and Gynecia in the northern part, with a Mediterranean coast line and Italian Somalia and Erythra on the eastern coast.

In the opinion of Italian colonial experts, decades must elapse before Africa can be opened up to any extensive railway development. Deserts, hostile tribes and other native obstacles stand in the way of any quick advance of the railway.

On the other hand, Italy is convinced that a great deal of the handicap entailed in the use of cars, vans, waterways and other existing means of communications can be greatly offset by airplane service.

One of the newest colonial airplanes to be established by Italy is between Tripoli and Homs. To the residents of the latter place, a week's time is saved in communications with both Italy and Tripoli. The distance of 100 kilometers between the two cities is covered in hours, according to the weather, and the return trips are made after a stop of three hours.

An extensive use of the airplane is also being made in Erythra, where the Duke of Abruzzi is now developing the colony from an agricultural and other standpoint.

NEW PROFESSOR IN CHAIR OF HISTORY

LONDON, Sept. 14.—Mr. Basil Williams, who was just appointed to the chair of history at McGill University, is well known here as a scholar of considerable reputation. About thirty years ago he was at New College, Oxford, where he took a first in classical "mods" and a second in "greats." He passed on to a clerkship in the House of Commons. He served in the South African War and at its conclusion acted as secretary to the Transvaal Education Department. Subsequently he sought Parliament honors, standing for Mid Sussex and Ruby as a Liberal in the two elections in 1910. During the two elections he received an active service and a second in the House of Commons. His literary work includes "William Pitt, Earl of Chatham," which is now recognized as the standard work of that statesman. This year he published an illuminating life of Cecil Rhodes.
