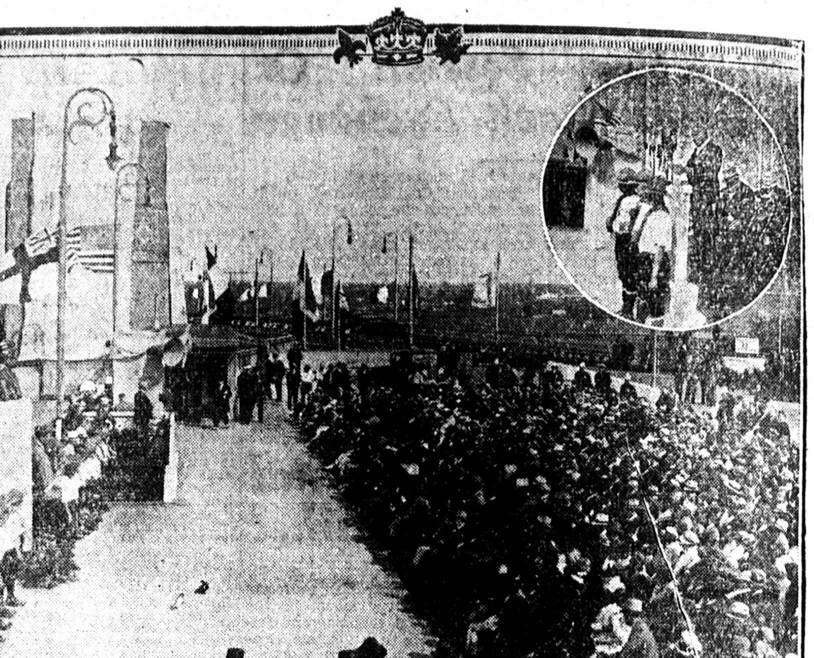
A Fitting Tribute to Two Great Discoveries



BY a curious coincidence the unveiling of the bust of Jacques Cartier, the gift of the French Government, on September first, on the Montreal Bridge which now bears his name, commemorated not alone the great discoverer of Canada, but also the Sixtieth Anniversary of Alexander Graham Bell's discovery of the principles of the telephone in Brantford, by virtue of the fact that a special public address system was used that the vast crowd of spectators might hear what was said. This was installed by National Sound Services, using the latest developments of the combined telephone and radio laboratories of the Northern Electric Company, thus marking a double epoch of Canadian discovery.

In the picture are seen left, bust of Jacques Cartier, a general view of the ceremony, and centre foreground, two of the pigeons which were released by boy scouts, seen in circle, signifying the harmonious communications between the four nations, England, France, United States and Canada. Inset, the speaker's stand with Mayor Houde seated behind the speaker, the horns and microphones of the public address system.
