Fascism Is In Its Infancy

"BABIES, MORE BABIES!" IS CRY OF DICTATORS AS GERMANY, ITALY RUN RACE TO INCREASE THEIR MAN-POWER FOR THAT "NEXT WAR"

BY MILTON BRONNER NEA Service Staff Correspondent LONDON, April 7—"Italy must have more babies," the warning cry uttered by Dictator Benito Mussolini, who himself is married and has young children, is matched by, "Germany must have many more babies," spoken by bachelor Adolf Hitler, leader of Nazifield Deutschland.

In both cases, the complaint in past times has been that the Germans were too crowded in the territory they possessed and that Italians were too cramped in their peninsula. Both nations, it was maintained, needed colonies in which to expand. Both needed colonies for raw materials.

Then comes the paradox—this insistence upon more babies, this alarm at the small families. On form, the dictators, worried about the millions of their countrymen being cramped within too small a space, should have been very pleased that the growth in population was slowing up. Instead of which, they are both embarking upon campaigns to speed up production of larger families.

The reasons are: (1) The assurance of a generation of young people to carry on the work started by the present generation. (2) A surplus population to do Italy's work of colonization in Libya and Abyssinia and to do Germany's similar work when and if she succeeds in getting her former colonies back. (3) Biggest reason of all—cannon fodder. It is a modern axiom of realistic dictators that a country is only really a great power when it has a large population because a large population means the possibility of a great army and a great army means the use of the threat of great force.

Birth Rate Still Disappoints

In Germany the "more babies" campaign was started almost as soon as Hitler got in the saddle in 1933. To encourage young people to marry, the state made them loans to help them set up house-keeping. For every child born to the marriage, part of the loan was remitted. Such marriages also had another effect in Germany. Women were taken out of employment and the vacant places were filled by unemployed men. But, despite all this encouragement and despite the fact that over 500,000 of these Hitler-subsidized marriages have taken place, the birth rate has not risen as the Nazi master hoped.

Joseph Goebbels, Minister of Propaganda, who can always be relied upon to give anything a fresh Nazi angle, says that failure to have children is a crime against the Nazi state and a sign of distrust of the Fuehrer. Special provisions of the new German penal code are being prepared for punishment of sexual immorality, thus encouraging more weddings. There is to be greater tolerance for illegitimate children. It is being borne in upon Germans that once marriage has been concluded, they must have as many children as possible. Families of four children are to be considered a minimum.

In Italy it is declared for too many babies have died of infantile diseases, and young children have succumbed to typhoid fever. The Fascist Grand Council has decreed that henceforth families of large families will be given preference in employment. There will be a policy of family wages, making income proportionate to the number of children the wage earner has to support. Marriage loans and dowry insurance will be arranged for newly-wed couples. Districts where there is no

Early are the seeds of Nazism and Fascism implanted in the youth of Germany and Italy. The upper picture—inadvertently symbolic of the manner in which Adolf Hitler is leading children of the Fatherland toward the training fields for war—shows a tow-head youngster accompanying Der Fuehrer at a military review in Berlin. At left, Premier Benito Mussolini salutes a very young Black Shirt with a kiss.
