SUCCESSFUL WHIST.—About two hundred attended the whist party at the League of the Cross Hall Thursday night under the auspices of the Children of Mary Sodality. A most enjoyable time was had. The ladies' prize was won by Mrs. J. Austin Trainor, the gentleman's by Mr. P. C. Trainor. Dainty refreshments were served during the evening.

FIREMEN'S RESOLUTION.—At the Annual Meeting of the Charlottetown Fire Department Wednesday evening it was unanimously expressed by the members that the practice of the citizens donating money to the department after fires, be discontinued. The firemen greatly appreciate the thoughtfulness and kindness promoting these generous gifts of acknowledgment, but the members of the department do not want such to become a practice. The firemen further declared that they will be amply repaid by continuing to hold the confidence and esteem of their fellow citizens.

RETURN TO FAR WEST.—Mr. and Mrs. Jos. J. McKinnon, who have been visiting the former's home at St. Peters were registered at the Revere Hotel Wednesday and left yesterday morning on their return. Mr. McKinnon, who was for a number of years in the employ of the late John Kiekham of Souris, left this Province in the spring of 1903, and shortly after located in Alaska, where he went into gold mining. He visited his native province about fifteen years ago, and hopes with Mrs. McKinnon to return again before many more years. Mrs. McKinnon is a native of Hamilton, Wash., and this is her first visit to the province. On the evening of their departure from St. Peters they were given a big time at the home of Mrs. McKinnon's uncle, Angus D. McKinnon, Goose River, at which there were over one hundred guests. Mr. and Mrs. McKinnon will visit Boston after which they will stop off for a few days at New York, Washington, New Orleans, El Paso, Texas, Los Angeles, Cal, Portland, Ore., and then Seattle, Wash., where they will embark on the steamer for Seward, Alaska. Reaching Seward they will travel by rail to Anchorage, where they will meet their dog teams and proceed to a small station or siding called Nancy. From here, the rest of the journey of 350 miles is made by dog sled.

FAIRBANKS IN "THE THREE MUSKETEERS" COMING

"Doug" Has Achieved the Ambition of a Lifetime in the Character of D'Artagnan.

Predictions are being made that the screening of Alexander Dumas' immortal story "The Three Musketeers" by Douglas Fairbanks will stand forth in motion picture history as an epochal event and that it will popularize for all time the costume photoplay.

Productions of this sort, even when based on the fictional writings of such masters as Dumas, have always been considered to be in "the danger zone," because it has never been established beyond question that the American public would receive the costume play with the same enthusiasm that has been accorded features more modern in locale and setting.

It has always been Fairbanks' curiosity we have made a celluloid reproduction of "The Three Musketeers," and we have crammed into it everything that is dramatic, instructive, human, amusing and entertaining. We have tried to swing every emotion in the human system, just as D'Artagnan did in his great novel.

The best talent procurable has been called upon to help transcribe this great story to the aluminum sheet. Edward Knoblock, one of the greatest writers of contemporary playwrights, is responsible for adaptation, research and costumes, while to Fred Niblo goes the honor of directing the piece. Niblo, a born adventurer, has won distinction as a master in guiding the destinies of this type of play; he is said to have no peer. Arthur Edes on, rated as a genuine lens artist, contention, however, that any story sufficiently powerful and gripping in drama is bound to succeed.

"A popular picture nowadays," said the star, "must be level; it must have comedy and pathos, but above all it must be human. Any story that is human will succeed regardless of whether the players wear wigs and short pants or are garbed in pajamas. Drama was the same in the Seventeenth Century as it is today. This may be the gasoline age of civilization, but it hasn't altered human emotions appreciably. People still laugh and cry and give vent to anger. And they are still inordinately curious. In fact, we progress because we are curious. People of today wonder if in the older days kings and queens and dukes and lords were swayed by the same passions and emotions that now rule humanity. To satisfy in a measure this is credited with the photography, and is said to have achieved some effects which hitherto have been considered impossible.

In the face of the business readjustment that the country has been facing, Fairbanks has spent more money on this production than on any picture he ever before undertook, all because he has confidence in the vehicle and in the amusement-seeking public. The "Three Musketeers" is said to be the greatest picture of its kind ever made. It is ten reels in length and cost a million dollars. United Artists Corporation is releasing the film.

Arrangements have been made for the showing of this feature in Charlottetown, at the Prince Edward Theatre, where it will be the main attraction for two days, Wednesday and Thursday, January 17 and 18.

An Orphan's Prayer

In view of the early opening of the P. E. Island Protestant Orphanage, the following poem contributed by a Charlottetown lady is appropriate.

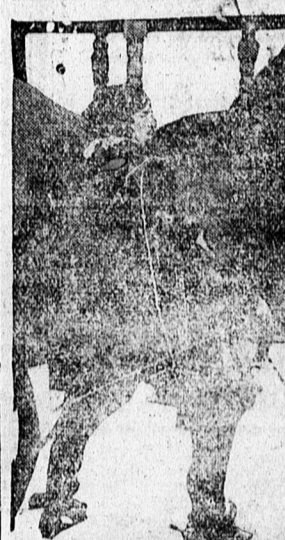

I'm only six years old dear Lord—but I want to talk to you! You know I haven't any folks and no one cares but you. My own mamma is up in Heaven, maybe she'll speak for me; She knows just how I need a friend, a good kind friend like Thee.

FAIRBANKS AT HIS BEST IN "MUSKETEERS"

At the Prince Edward Wednesday and Thursday, Jan. 17 and 18

Afforded the Greatest Opportunity of His Life in Depicting Dumas' Greatest Character

Alexander Dumas always gave good measure. He surpassed himself in good measure when he wrote "The Three Musketeers." Analysis of this best-loved story in the world's library of romantic fiction demonstrates why this is true. The prolific French author filled the book not only with suspense situations, wit and action, but also threw in, with a lavish hand, a most powerful group of characters—a group hard to match in any other novel. Each one of the characters was really worthy of a separate story.

thos and Aramis. And the outstanding character who bewitches the imagination—D'Artagnan. Of the whole troop, D'Artagnan dominates the reader's interest. Poverty, youth; ambition, courage, native shrewdness, extravagance, hot temper and good humor—these are mingled in the agile young cad whose ambition was to be worthy of a commission in the king's company. If any reader of this day were asked who might best typify the volatile spirit of D'Artagnan—the answer would be Douglas Fairbanks, the mercurial genius of the screen.

Dumas died before the period of Douglas Fairbanks, but he might prophetically have written the story for him, since the announcement is now broadcast that Fairbanks will appear at the Prince Edward Theatre in "The Three Musketeers," and play D'Artagnan. And he is indeed worthy of its fame, and worthy of its character wealth. Unless he can find greater material, it will always remain Fairbanks' biggest picture.

As the most engaging, lively and dashing film favorite, Fairbanks has found the role temperamentally ideal. For, consider the Dumas story and its opportunities. D'Artagnan is cast dynamically into an atmosphere of Seventeenth Century high intrigue. From his humble home in Gascony he journeys to Paris to make his fortune. He is armed only with his father's honored sword and the heart of a lion, but with these he steps precipitately into adventure that con-please build an Orphan's Home.

Build it good and big so it will hold all little orphan boys. And Make it have a big play room piled up all full of toys, And brothers and sisters I will have all just the size of me. Oh! What a dandy time we'd have one great big family. And send us some nice lady who will wrap the blankets tight, And tell a Peter Rabbit story and kiss us all good-night. Bless all the little girls and boys who are alone like me, And make me a good little boy—Just like I want to be. Amen.

M. D. STEFANSSON ABANDONS CAREER AS AN EXPLORER

NEW YORK, Jan 12.—Vilhjalmur Stefansson, Arctic explorer, yesterday announced abandonment of his career as an explorer, to devote his efforts to proving to a decade or two the North Polar Ocean will be crossed by a network of commercial aviation routes and that the Arctic regions, hitherto known as mysterious, uninhabitable lands, will be the source of developed unlimited in magnitude.

nects him at once with the problems of royalty. He almost chafes his sword with the blood of the plotters, deRochefort, meets Milady without suspecting the villainy underlying her charm. In Paris his introduction to the three chumps is a challenge to turn by which they are bonded together for life. His love for Constance, a lady in waiting to the Queen, leads him to the supreme adventure of the story—a mission to recover from her admirer, England, Buckingham, the evidence Anne of Austria is not involved, needed to convince Louis XIII that and to confound the insinuations of the Cardinal, her foe.

The principal struggle in the story is D'Artagnan's dash to obtain this evidence and to return to his native France by the Cardinal and his fighting guards; in England by his influence and by the machinations of Milady. How D'Artagnan goes and returns, fighting every step, and manages to save the reputation of the Government at last moment, provides this exciting main thread; a more tragic one is the secret history of Aramis, whose renegade wife is discovered in the adventures of Milady.

These situations but fairly cover the scope of "The Three Musketeers," whose story sweeps
