POST MORTEMS

The Liberal press is now explaining how it all happened and some of the explanations are amusing and interesting, also ominous for the future of Canada. Fortunately many of the explanations will not be taken too seriously and a composite Government will no doubt be established and the country will keep on keeping on, more or less handicapped by Government uncertainty as to how the straight Liberals and the Progressives with the string attached will pull together.

The Toronto Star, one of the grittiest of the Grit newspapers, also one of the most unscrupulous, hopes to see the "constitutional" question taken up in parliament when the House meets. While this would doubtless interest certain people in Canada, real Canadians will very properly regard it as playing with fire. The Star suggests that "Mr. King did not step down but merely stepped aside." Just how this coincides with what really happened, just what Mr. King's resignation tendered to His Excellency and "graciously accepted," actually meant or what other course could have been adopted, has not been fully explained. Mr. King himself declared on that last day in Parliament, "I am not Premier, there is no Premier." A Premier was accordingly appointed by His Excellency and that Premier was the Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen. What happened thereafter is history; how it happened and what is to happen next is not and cannot now be known.

Mr. King will probably form his Cabinet in the course of a few days. Each Cabinet Minister accepting a portfolio must go to his constituency for re-election. In all probability little opposition will be taken to this course. What most interests the people is the distribution of these Cabinet Ministries and that all Canada shall be given a fair representation.

A WORTHY MOVE

The ladies of Summerside, members of the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, are to be congratulated on the splendid course of lectures arranged by them for the coming winter. Rather, perhaps, the citizens of Summerside are to be congratulated on having in their midst a live, capable, energetic and public-spirited organization willing to devote their time and talents to such an undertaking. Speaking of the arrangement, one of the members explained to The Guardian that "this course of lectures is in aid of the Public Library, but our chief aim is to try to interest the people in something beyond that which merely amuses."

This course of lectures is the natural outcome of persistent and continuous effort on the part of a band of philanthropic ladies who began in a modest way with a small but ever-growing public library, literary meetings which have steadily increased in interest, a reading room with growing patronage and, now, a course of lectures worthy of a much larger city and certainly of a character "to interest the people in something beyond that which merely amuses."

The course begins on September 27th with a lecture by the Rev. Dr. Clarence MacKinnon, of Halifax on "The Italy of today." This will be followed by weekly lectures, the second on October 5th by Dr. Clarence Webster of New Brunswick, one of the best known educationalists in Canada; his subject will be "Stirring Times in Old Acadia"; October 12th, Miss Carrie E. Holman on "Cathedrals"; October 19th, Professor Liddy, Ph. D., of Mount Allison, on "Crime and Individuality"; and on October 26th, Dr. Gauthier, subject to be announced; November 2nd, Mr. A. E. Morrison, Charlottetown, "A Tour Around the World"; November 9th, Rev. W. Bruce Mair, "Robert Louis Stevenson"; November 16th, Dr. McPhee, "Sir William Osler"; November 23rd, Chief Justice Mathieson, subject to be announced; November 30th, Social Evening.

ELECTION MONEY.

We have not heard that any qualified, registered voter refused to accept money offered him or her, on election day, in exchange for their support. Some may have demurred at the amount offered, and even refused to accept it, hoping for a rise in the market towards evening. We have heard much comment and considerable speculation however, regarding the fact that all the offers and donations by certain canvassers were exclusively in American notes of various denominations, generally in fives and tens. Nor have we heard that any elector, male or female, had any compunction about the nationality of his bills. Business, it is known, has no sentiment and a five or a ten in American bills at par is as good as the coin of the realm.

While the national character of this election money was very freely commented upon at the time little anxiety was entertained until newspapers from elsewhere drew attention to the fact that in their respective constituencies the "bait" was predominantly of American origin. The Chatham World, a very reliable newspaper, has this to say on the subject:—

"It would appear that Mackenzie King had good reasons for predicting a Liberal victory, which at the time of writing seems apparent. From all reports he was betting on a sure thing. Current rumor places the sure thing as American boodle. The amount has been placed at a half million dollars. This large sum should accomplish much. It has! Apparently it has debauched an appreciable number of so-called Canadians. Possibly the term renegades would be more appropriate.

"In conversation with a professional gentleman, who has had a long residence in the United States, he made the statement that in order to handle the natural resources of Canada that there are organizations in the States that would willingly contribute a million dollars to effect that result. If rumor can be relied on it only required half that amount on this occasion."

All this, in Chatham, in Charlottetown and elsewhere may have been a coincidence, but it is significant that the American money was handled by Liberal agents and that while Conservatives no doubt also used money freely they have not been accused of using other than their own money.

The election is over. That we have been bought and sold may or may not be true, but no one of ordinary intelligence will think for a moment that the election was won or lost on political grounds. In any case it is a time for serious thinking on the part of Canadians who value Canadian and British connection.

Mr. King will no doubt hurry up his Cabinet-making. All the old timber that was left unbroken in the crash at the end of June will be brought together again, barring those that didn't face the election music. They are all as willing as Barks to come back after three months in the cold shades of Opposition.

King at the head of the table, Dunning as Minister of Railways, Robb as Finance Minister, and the other King from British Columbia, sole surviving Liberal in that province, picks up the Public Works portfolio again. Forke and another Liberal-Progressive from the West are to be taken in along with the wily and resourceful Veniot from New Brunswick as new material for the structure, and possibly the newly elected member from Yarmouth with a portfolio. Hon. Mr. Sinclair will be restored to his former Cabinet position also, as everybody expects.

It is to be hoped that when Parliament meets in November no time will be wasted in a debate on the Address, and if the Opposition exercise a wise discretion, as it is expected they will, the House will quickly get down to business. In the meantime the heads of Departments will no doubt have been elected by acclamation, as is the usual course.

The Prime Minister is expected to attend the London Conference, and what his attitude there may be is already a matter of grave concern in both Canada and Great Britain. A Paris newspaper intimates that "the structure of the British Empire may be at stake" in the Conference proceedings, and sets forth the reasons why this serious possibility exists.

Le Quotidien, the journal referred to, says:—

"The Canada of the French language was hostile to Mr. Meighen personally. That antipathy has not been foreign to the result. The Liberal Premier will be the delegate of the Dominion at the Imperial Conference and will come there with a double mandate, that of proposing that the Governor-General should be chosen from the political men of Canada, or at least indicated by the Canadian parliamentary majority, and that of claiming for the Dominions the right of handling their foreign affairs themselves. On this last stand he will align himself with General Herzog, the Premier of the Union of South Africa."

This double mandate, unheard of in the election campaign, gives food for serious thought both in Canada and in Great Britain. It is certain that the people of Canada have given no such mandate to Mr. King either with regard to the Governor-General or the treaty-making power.

An alignment of Premier King with the Boer Premier of South Africa for the purpose specified would be resented by a very large portion of the people of Canada as a first step toward the dismemberment of the Empire.

We shall doubtless learn more of this matter before the Conference meets. While Mr. King has no mandate as yet to disturb our present relations with the Imperial Government, it seems not improbable that he may ask authority of Parliament to do so, an authority which could only be rightly conferred by the people of Canada after they were consulted in regard thereto. So far the people of Canada have not been consulted at all.

This home news from Paris whether authentic or not, will probably have the effect of directing more than usual attention and interest to the Imperial Conference session that is shortly to take place.

Notes by the Way

There's to be a quick change of Government at Ottawa. Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen, whatever his opponents may say of him, is not the man to cling to office after being defeated. His resignation is ready whenever Mackenzie King gets ready to take over the business of governing Canada. Those bad Tories seem to have a sense of honor after all.

Mr. King will no doubt hurry up his Cabinet-making. All the old timber that was left unbroken in the crash at the end of June will be brought together again, barring those that didn't face the election music. That Body of Hours

By James W. Gordon, M.D.

THE USE OF LIME

I speak from time to time about our old friend chloride of lime. We think of it as simply a disinfectant and a handy article around the summer cottage.

But this very power it possesses of overcoming bad odors gives us an idea of its usefulness in various ailments of the body. I spoke once before about its use in the treatment of severe ulcers that have defied all other methods of treatment. Also of how acid conditions of the system were being corrected by the medical and dental professions.

Its use to help coagulate the blood in case of severe bleeding is known throughout the world.

And now a Spanish physician who has been using chloride of lime for twelve years for various ailments, tells us that he had had considerable success with it in cases of acute tuberculosis.

He cites a case of a man 50 years of age, with hemorrhages and tubercle bacilli in sputum, a real active case of what was formerly called "Galloping Consumption." An attack of Ph. six months previous to this consultation with this physician, had never really cleared up, and he had been gradually going down hill with loss of weight and persistent coughing. Within three weeks after the administration of the chloride of lime the temperature went down to normal and remained there, and within a few months he was completely well.

In a case of tuberculosis of the covering of intestine in a boy of 12 years, a daily dose for forty days resulted in a complete cure.

Now when we remember the tremendous mortality in these cases, it is certainly a ray of hope for future treatment.

His treatment was by injection into the vein which brought the lime directly into the blood.

The use of the chloride of lime by mouth in a syrupy solution of from five to fifteen grains to the teaspoonful, has been wonderfully effective in "bracing up" folks who have been feeling "all worn out."

For most of us, eating of food rich in lime, such as vegetables and fruits, is about all we need to do to supply the necessary amount to the system.

And it is just a bit more pleasant to the taste also.

It is to be hoped that when Parliament meets in November no time will be wasted in a debate on the Address, and if the Opposition exercise a wise discretion, as it is expected they will, the House will quickly get down to business. In the meantime the heads of Departments will no doubt have been elected by acclamation, as is the usual course.

THE SQUARE DEAL

IS ALL THIS PROVINCE DEMANDING—THIS CAN BE NO LET-UP ON THE SUBJECT

Historical.

It is well that the Federal Elections are over for the present, as many questions relative to the claims of this Province upon the Dominion have received airing during the campaign, and are now ripe for new negotiations. We have heard what great things the victorious party have done, and both men and women have heard what the candidates would do for Prince Edward Island if elected. These promises are on record and depend upon it, they will not be permitted to fade from the people's memory. That is to say, in the years to come and in the immediate future, the incoming Government may depend upon being called on to perform these promises. The Government's neglect of the late Liberal-Progressive groups will not be tolerated in the past. They have contended that they had filled our orders, an attitude which suggests that the neglect has been neglected by ourselves. No such excuse will be possible in the future. The sins of omission will be kept constantly in view.

In the first place they cannot start a day too soon to procure another up-to-date Car Ferry. It will take considerable time to accomplish this work and no person can foretell how soon it may be required. It is of more vital importance to the Dominion than the construction of steamers for the Hudson Bay route. In our case it is a matter of keeping faith with a Province of Canada. In the case of the Hudson Bay the delay of a few months or even years would not inflict disaster upon our sister province of British Columbia. It would only affect one corner of it, as it has other routes and ships to fall back upon. It is not so with us.

There is another burning question that will not brook delay much longer. The Ottawa Government must grapple at once with the question of the western lands, which were faithfully passed over to the provinces of Ontario, Quebec and Alberta, without the slightest regard for our equitable share in those lands. Since then it has assumed the form of a large-sized bluff upon a small-sized Province, whilst our Province has been compelled to struggle with insufficient Provincial revenues to meet our necessities—forced by this federal grab to impose direct taxation on every foot of land they own and had to pay the cold cash for.

It is amusing to witness how careless our electors become in this matter when a general federal election takes place, in comparison with their fighting spirit when it comes to their turn to raise revenue which should be provided in compensation for our share of those big gifts of land in the West. We hope, however, that Islanders will soon recognize the propriety of agitating for compensation for those lands rather than dipping down into their pockets for revenue to carry on their public affairs.

There is another amount, the payment of which by P. E. Island should be resisted to a successful finish. We refer to the $17,000 indebtedness in connection with the Mitchell case. Our local Government should not pay this under any circumstances. Let Bell and Sinclair pay it if the Ottawa Government refuses to clear it up.

There are many other matters in the catalogue which this Province has not been able to get straightened out as yet, but which are perfectly legitimate claims. In fact, the Ottawa defaulters have been let off too easy. The programme should be immediately changed. We have listened during the recent campaign to glowing accounts of the boundless resources of this West of ours, all of which should be good for what is due our Province. Then let the fight begin and these demands pressed for settlement and thus avoid creating a situation in this country similar to men live longer than any other that of the 14th inst., which will class of men, the government stat cost about two million dollars.
