Mark Coop Plainly With Your Name and Address. Fasten Tag on end of Coop—Not on Top. Mail Invoice

With Each Shipment Do not Overcrowd Your Coops

Coops should be high enough to permit the poultry to stand easily upright without bending their legs and with space enough between the slats to pass their heads through. The coops should be strong, but light; heavy wood can be dispensed with if long nails are used. They should not be so large as to be awkward and cumbersome to handle.

THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION

By Marlon Rubincam

WE PREPARE TO LEAVE

Chapter 61

"I must go," Violet said to me "Bud wants me."

"That in itself was sufficient for her. As for myself, I wanted nothing more than to get back to our little apartment in the city. We lived our own lives there—here, we were subject to Esther's despotism, which irked us, no matter how benevolent she intended it to be."

"Helen comes out to see us this week," I said. "She's taking a vacation. We can't go until after that."

All right, Vi said with a little sigh. I'll tell her how much I want to go back, and she won't mind if we all live together for a week or so. I'll write to Bud tonight.

Better go to bed and forget about it till tomorrow, I answered. There's no mail from the village till tomorrow at five. Go off in the woods in the morning and write to me. I'll do you work.

No, thanks, Vi answered. Tomorrow is too far away.

I smiled a little in the dark. There is no tomorrow in the calculations of youth though all life is a tomorrow for them. Youth looks at the present moment, age looks backward. Few of us are content to live in, and believe in, the future.

Feeling her unhappiness, I went restless too. Hours later I was still awake. I got up and looked down the hall. The light shone out from under the door of her room.

I had my own thoughts too, more than enough to keep me busy. Esther said several times that she wanted to go to the city this winter, and now I was sure she really intended to do it. There were several reasons why.

For one thing, I had only enough money for part of the year. I talked it over with Esther only that morning.

I am going to send my check for the first half of the college account, I said. That will be until February. That will leave enough in my bank account to cover our rent until the end of January, and enough besides to keep us quite comfortable.

Not a thing, Esther answered. I thought yesterday, when you went for a drive alone he might well I thought, he was going to talk about it I suggested.

Thought so myself, when I got over being surprised that he should want me to go driving, Esther answered. But we was so silent the Sphinx would have seemed like a chatterbox in comparison. Finally I couldn't stand it no more, and I asked about her. But not a word.

I asked him at last, was she pretty? He was getting mad by that time and he said yes. I asked was she young? And he said, not much younger than me. I dunno. He was mad enough to say anything by that time.

Well, about Vi—he might give her the money to go, so's not to have me around prying into his affairs. Then you can take your money and use it on her third year till it was gone, else just save it—what little's left of it.

Or perhaps you might go in and stay till February when your money is used up, and I can get Jim to pay the rest of the term's expenses and let me come in.

So things stood that night as I lay awake and thought about it. Next day I began gathering up some of our things, getting them into my old trunk—the heavy blankets brought out here and washed and dried in the hot sun, some more material I was to sew on the rag rug I had made that summer, and other things of that sort. Our plans were to be so attractive. And perhaps I would not stay on here with only Jim and Helen in the farmhouse with a couple of work and nothing to stimulate me or make life seem worth living.

There was only Helen's visit to look forward to.

comfortably—in fact, by being very economical we might have enough to stay on in the city until March. Then Vi would escape the worst part of the country winter—and you know the cold always bothers her.

She might be used to it, Esther grumbled. She's spent some 17 winters in Henly Falls.

But her health is never so good in the winter, I answered. She has a cold from December until March usually.

Well, she's likely to spend several more winters in the country, was all the sympathy Esther expressed. If she'd bundle up warm she wouldn't get so many colds.

After a time Esther said, Maybe Jim would pay Vi's expenses and the fiat you got and all that, and I could go with her this winter. It perked you up so—and I guess I need something happen to me like what happened to you.

I said nothing. After all I know I would do what ever my sister-in-law decided. I could not help myself.

Guess Jim might part with the money for the sake of getting rid of me for a few months, she went on, a little bitterness in her tones. Then he'd have more time to run around with that Eastlake woman. Did he tell you anything about it? I was too curious to refrain from asking.

Not a thing, Esther answered. I thought yesterday, when you went for a drive alone he might well I thought, he was going to talk about it I suggested.

Thought so myself, when I got over being surprised that he should want me to go driving, Esther answered. But we was so silent the Sphinx would have seemed like a chatterbox in comparison. Finally I couldn't stand it no more, and I asked about her. But not a word.

"Broken Wing"

A Jump-spark Romance of Modern Mexico

BY PAUL DICKEY AND CHAS. W. GODDARD

From the Sensationally Successful Play Novelized by Charles W. Goddard.

A light of understanding came into the Yankee's eyes. He glanced at the battered aeroplane and back at his companion.

"Was that young Marvin who fell last night? Have you got him?" The captain handed him the cigarette case. Cross read aloud:

"Phillip J. Marvin, New York City. Phillip J., I am not sure about Phillip J. One of these Marvin birds has a barrel of money—but I can find out. Over at the mine I've got an up to the minute list of every son of a gun in the 'States' that's got a dime. What's the idea—rasmus?"

"How you like it?" "I don't like it. You'll have the United States cavalry down here. 'What we care?' asked the native, cheerfully. 'They have spent here before. What they do? Spend plenty money, then pretty soon they go back again.'

"Yes," said the American crook, looking the bandit straight in the eye. "But things are different now and the next time the United States cavalry comes down here they'll not only clean up this many place, but they'll disintegrate it."

CHAPTER V.

It was a crazy, foolhardy thing Cross had done. The logical result would be a quick shot and months later, another American listed in the papers as "Killed in Mexico." That would be all he was a renegade Yankee, unarmed, in one of the wildest and most lawless parts of Mexico, in the absolute power of Innocencio, and he had dared to insult that proud bandit and his country.

But the captain made no move to shoot. His estimate of this lawless, drawing Northern rose several degrees. Up to this moment he had despised Cross as a cheap American crook who played a safe but mean game swindling his fellow countrymen with worthless oil stocks. He had heard Farley refer to him as a disgrace to the flag of the United States, yet here he was standing up for that flag at the risk of his life.

The crook had nerve, he would make a good partner. So the bandit chuckled and contented himself with a sarcastic reference to making the world safe for democracy—whatever that might be.

Cross did not answer for just at that moment Inez stepped into the patio and welcomed him most cordially. She always welcomed Americans too cordially to suit her.

"The Captain," said Cross, in his most business-like manner, "but with a twinkle in his eye, 'you remember those goods you wanted me to send you from the States?'"

She nodded with a slight blush and an embarrassed glance at the Captain who was eyeing her sharply.

Well, do you want them sent plain C.O.D., or with the privilege of inspection?"

Guess you don't need to send any now.

I knew you were kidding, Cross smiled.

Excuse, I was no kidding, Inez corrected him soberly. "I mean what I say then, but now I have changed my mind."

Sure, I get you. You are going to fill the order in the local market. Glad to hear it that's the best way.

He looked mischievously at the Captain who suddenly stopped his fixed stare and led the American out of the gate, explaining over his shoulder that there was private business to discuss.

Withdraw From League

Major Power Will Submit Resolution in Parliament

QUEBEC, Oct. 12.—The withdrawal of Canada from the League of Nations on the ground that his Dominion has no common interest in that body, and in fact, is only getting entangled in difficulties of all kinds, will be proposed at the next session of the Federal Parliament by Major C. G. Power, M. C., M. P. for Quebec South. He so informed the Gazette representative this evening. Not only will the motion be made, but Major Power is of the opinion that he will have strong support from members from all the provinces, with whom he had the opportunity of discussing what he claims to be the uselessness of any relation with that body. He also contends that in addition to the complete insipidity of the majority of the problems discussed by the League federal Cabinet ministers have lost too much time attending those deliberations.

RULE MINISTERS MUST BE MEMBERS ON JAIL

DUBLIN, Oct. 13.—Parliament today by a vote of thirty-one to thirty rejected a proposed amendment to the constitution which would enable some of the ministers of the Free State not to hold membership in the Dail. The question was left to the free judgment of the house, and there was much cross-voting among all sections of the members.

Salts For Kidneys Better Than Drugs

If Your Back Hurts or Bladder Bothers, Drink Lots of Water

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean by flushing them with a mild, harmless salt which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity. The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grams of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and this famous salt is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for generations to clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in urine so it is no longer a source of irritation, thus often ending bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful beverage; keeps the kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

ROTARIANS FINED FOR SWEET CHARITY'S SAKE

All Toronto Rotarians whose initials begin from "K" to "Z" were fined at the Rotary luncheon yesterday for not having as many of their fellows out as the "A" to "K's" had. The fines were originally intended to buy cigars for the winners.

Rotarian Charlie Edmonds, one of the triumphant, would not have it thus. He was on his feet in a second demanding that the fines go to the Federation of Community service as one of the first donations, gathering 335 in number he fined for the fifty odd delinquents. He won his case. Good boy, Charlie.
