—BURGLAR ALARM—During the past hour scene in Summerside, when no householder feels sure that he will not be poorer when he wakes up in the morning, many of the inventive youths of the town are trying to produce traps and alarms that will make the burglar profession a hazardous one in Summerside at least. The other night one of the popular young men of the town returned home shortly after midnight and, creeping along so that he would not wake up the rest of the house, engaged himself with a cord that released a burglar alarm, arousing the rest of the family and getting himself tangled up pretty thoroughly. It was a trap that little kid brother had prepared and though it did not catch the right person, it proved that it could work, at least.

—ST. PATRICK'S AT KENSINGTON
The Feast of St. Patrick was consistently celebrated at Kensington on the recurrence of the Feast Day with a prominence that the importance of the occasion, estimated, Mr. James Pendergast happily presided and guided the celebration through development of the fact of a consummate masterpiece. The spacious Strand Theatre was comfortably crowded and all were joyously happy.

The subject programme was introduced with a sprinkling of golden sounds from a musical stringed trio that immediately disposed the audience to await succeeding numbers with avidity.

Programme
Irish music Istinviolin Bernard Deany, 2nd. Viola, Willard Brown, Piano, Miss Ella McMahon. Vocal Solo, Miss Beatrice Frances, and Miss Helen Cooke, Vocal Solo, Mrs. Clark Woodside. Declaration of Miss Irene Cameron. Orator, Rev. G. J. McLellan, D. D., Drama, 1st. Act, Mr. Bob Ken. Driving Club. Solo, Mr. T. W. Bentley. Drama, 2nd. Act, God Save the King.

The accompanists were Mrs. W. S. Delany, Miss Ella McMahon. The several numbers were rendered in a spirit which showed that the performers entered fully into the spirit of the celebration and the audience showed their sympathy an appreciation with generous applause. Every member was sincerely endeared and the performers responded with capable promptitude.

The drama "Mr. Bob" was excellently well staged and the actors were extravagantly applauded by the punctuated appreciation of a cognizant audience. But the number on the programme that fully rose to the importance of the occasion and that adorned with distinguished honor the superior oration of Dr. McLellan. This eloquent orator had not finished his introduction before the audience master both in matter and form, of the theme that he chose to emphasize. He showed clearly from indisputable historical records, what Ireland has done for Education.

He introduced the substance of his theme with the consisted exposition of which education really being. This development is naturally divided into two parts, the development of the intellect and of the will and the development of the physical being. The intellect and will must be directed to their proper objects which are truth and good, the later demanding moral training. Any education that does not include these essentials does not constitute a rationally balanced education. The educational systems of ancient Greece and Rome did not include all these essentials, hence they failed in attaining the greatest good.

But the ideals of the Irish schools survive today. Ireland was the island of scholars and of saints. Six hundred years before the birth of Christ, Ireland was inhabited. They had their schools and colleges and effected complete development. This is the country that St. Patrick won to Christianity and the steadfastness with which Irishmen still hold to the Faith shows how successfully his mission was accomplished. He was not preached to a nation of barbarians, but to one with intellects already developed, and with morals tainted by the crimes of contemporary peoples.

In a few years the whole country was converted to Christianity and that conversion remains to the present day.

Schools were founded, colleges established. In Armagh a school was founded. In the days of St. Patrick that endured down to 1790 and shed the light of knowledge upon 7,000 students yearly.

Alcum, the light of York, shed intelligence upon Irish educators. The Irish had in those days thirty-six schools of the highest rank of knowledge. Armagh had 7,000 students. The laity of Ireland was adequately educated. In value, as well as in education, Ireland excelled. The Roman legion never entered Ireland. The Irish knew the Romans as traders, not as conquerors. The Roman, Goth and Germanic tribes overran Europe but Ireland alone withstood their belligerent advance.

The lecturer here traced the history of the founding of the monasteries. Five countries in Ireland strove energetically and successfully to foster and develop education and scholars from there founded institutions in France, Switzerland, Italy and Germany and aided potently in civilizing these countries. The monks in Ireland educated the people.

History proves that for five centuries Ireland provided scholars for Europe. Culture was sent to Christianize. The Danes pillaged the monasteries, the Irish restored them. Later these monasteries were pillaged and destroyed and this dealt a death blow to the flourishing educational influence that developed the people. When the schools of the continent opened their doors to invite the Irish students, they were only repairing the deep debt that they owed Ireland for developing their own system.

But Ireland is coming back and the world will yet learn what is the force and power of Irish education. No people are so forgiving as the Irish. The educated intellects of Ireland have demanded justice. Again we shall see Ireland transformed into the land that St. Patrick besought Heaven to maintain her "The Island of Schools and Saints."
