

WAS VERY WEAK NERVOUS AND MELANCHOLY

Mrs. Geo. McKenzie, Campbellford, Ont., writes: "A short time ago I was troubled very badly with my heart and nerves, the cause of it, I think, was my going through the change of life."

"I was very weak and melancholy, and so nervous I could hardly bear to hear a clock ticking, and I did not sleep well."

"I was advised to try so I sent at once for a box; took them and got another, and before they were all gone I felt good, my nerves are fine, I do not mind any noise, and I can sleep well. I cannot recommend them too highly to those suffering as I did."

Price 50c. a box at all druggists and dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Goitre Not A Disease

MILWAUKEE DOCTOR MAKES REMARKABLE DISCOVERY

Milwaukee, Wis.—It has been brought to light by scientific research that goitre is not a disease and is not to be treated as such. Dr. A. A. Rock, Dept. 730, Box 737, Milwaukee, Wis., a prominent goitre specialist for over 24 years, has perfected a different method of treatment for his patients that has proved remarkably successful. This same method is now being used for a home treatment of goitre cases all over the country with astonishing results. The Doctor states that goitre is a condition which grows worse with neglect and recommends immediate attention no matter how small the growth may appear. He strongly opposes needless operations. Dr. Rock is the author of a book that tells in a simple way about treating goitre at home. He has published this book at his own expense and will send a copy free to anyone interested. Write him today. Adv.

"Jealous Hearts"

By MILDRED BARBOUR

THE GREEN-EYED MONSTER

Tony's house-guests arrived at Lynnwood for the hunting, and Millicent went to Carver Hall with Aunt Het before any word came from New York concerning Elinor and her activities.

Millicent, forcing herself to keep occupied by putting the home of her childhood—now her own property—in order, found a question continually hammering against her brain. Had Tony told the truth when he had said that he had not heard from Elinor?

Millicent hated herself for the thought. "Why, I'm beginning to suspect his every word," she told herself, in dismay.

And yet, it seemed incredible to her that, after the vision she had of Elinor in Tony's arms on the night before her departure, Elinor had not written to the man whom she must love.

Even yet, Millicent didn't understand her foster-sister. She measured her in terms of her own candor and devotion. To Millicent a kiss meant love; a heart irrevocably given. In her wildest imagination, she couldn't conceive of Elinor's kissing Tony without adoring him as she herself did.

Her peace of mind was not increased by the arrival of a sister of Aunt Het's, a middle-aged spinster, only slightly less tactful than Aunt Het herself, who had frequently spent a month or two each year at Carver Hall, during Daniel Carver's lifetime and, knowing Elinor, Millicent, and Tony Deering from childhood, felt perfectly free to speak her mind at any time.

"I declare, Millicent, you could have knocked me over with a feather when Het wrote me about your marriage to Tony," were her first words, after she had been relieved

ABBEY'S For Constipation

Millicent hid the pain in her eyes and concealed her trembling fingers by playing with the tea-service. "It's hardly quite like that," she answered steadily. "Elinor has a home here at Carver Hall—always. She preferred to go to New York to cultivate her voice for opera."

"The older woman laughed. "Yes. After she'd failed to land Tony Deering." Millicent's breath caught painfully. "What do you mean?"

The garrulous guest wagged an arch finger at her. "Never you mind! I know what I know. That young lady was crazy about him when I was here last summer, and there's no reason to suppose she got over it."

Millicent said sharply, breathlessly: "Please tell me what you mean!" The older woman was startled at the tone. A glance at the tense young face made her uneasily aware that she'd been talking too much.

"Oh, now, Millicent, don't you go crazy about him when I was here last summer, and there's no reason to suppose she got over it."

Millicent said sharply, breathlessly: "Please tell me what you mean!" The older woman was startled at the tone. A glance at the tense young face made her uneasily aware that she'd been talking too much.

"I declare, Millicent, you could have knocked me over with a feather when Het wrote me about your marriage to Tony," were her first words, after she had been relieved

"Oh, now, Millicent... I was only meaning to say... you'd certainly put one over on Elinor when you took Tony right out from under her nose..."

And what was the truth in this bewildering morass of fact and supposition? She knew—or believed she knew—that Elinor was in love with Tony. But, according to this talkative guest of hers, Elinor had failed to capture Tony, though she loved him! And yet, she herself was certain that Tony loved Elinor.

"What shall I do?" she thought, after her visitor had betaken herself off for a nap. "I can't go on like this. Shall I make a clean breast of what I know to Elinor? Or, better yet, to Tony? Shall I ask them to tell me the truth? But would they, under the circumstances? And would I ever be sure it was the truth?"

She was in this state of perplexing and tormenting doubt when Elinor's first letter arrived and it proved so disquieting that her own personal problem was put aside temporarily.
