Soviet Population Divided Into More Classes Than Outside Capitalistic World

Communist Ideal Envisions Humankind Working Together On Terms Of Equality, But Sharp Lines Now Maintained.

EDITOR'S NOTE.—This is the third of the series of articles by Eugene Lyons summarizing impressions after three years in the Soviet Union.

(Special To The Guardian) MOSCOW, March 5.—The Communist ideal envisions a society without classes, all humankind working together on terms of equality.

For the present, however, the Soviet population is carefully divided and sub-divided into more classes than the capitalist world outside. On the road toward the classless society its creators find it necessary to draw sharp frontier lines between as many different groups in the population as possible.

For the Marxist under a bourgeois system the rough division of people into capitalists and workers, exploiters and victims, generally suffices. Here where Marxism is not merely a philosophy but a basis for practical action people are split into endless classes and categories according to which they are fed, taxed, given work trusted or terrorized.

Sub-divisions Logical

Such divisions are thoroughly in line with the logic of Communist thought. Since the individual counts for nothing, is only a grain of his social group or collective, the multiplication of such groups is inevitable.

Let us begin with the farmers. Where once there were landlords and peasants, now we find kulaks (the better-to-do farmers), middle peasants, poor peasants and batraks, or landless farm hands. The last two classes are of course the favorites. Upon them the Soviet regime bases its plans and its hopes, upon them it lavishes its resources.

The middle peasants are a harassed and driven lot, poised dangerously between the blessed poor and damned kulaks. Officially they are supposed to be reconciled and drawn into the Soviet schemes; in practice, especially if they are obdurate, they are too often confounded with the hated kulaks. As to these, they are scarcely better than outlaws and formally doomed to extinction as a class by the end of this year, a process of ruthless expurgation already well started.

Political Reasons

The political reasons for such artificial and seemingly iniquitous splintering of the working class are not far to seek. The revolution needed one powerful group upon which it could rely 100 per cent and whose loyalty it could maintain at the boiling point always. The brain workers offered no such safe reliance. They included large masses closely tied by their tastes and mental habits to the bankrupt past. With its resources limited, the Kremlin concentrated upon one small but basic element in the population. The proletarian dictatorship believes in quality rather than quantity in its leadership.

Yet the process of artificially sundering different portions of the class in whose name the Soviets govern holds serious dangers for the experiment in which they are plunged. It is March 1st came in like a lamb, how disappointed those of us were, who believe the old saying "If March comes in like a lamb, she will go out like a lion." Let us hope for once that there is no truth in these old sayings, for we have had sufficient snow. Thank you for one year!—O.

KING OF WILD HORSES ESCAPES

SAN ANGELO, Tex., March 3.—Cowboys again are looking for the "king of the wild horses." J. E. Tippett, rancher whose deerskin recently roped the stallion after a long chase, went to his corral a few days ago to find that he had escaped.

N. C. PUTS FAITH IN FUR

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Feb. 26.—Colors of the University of North Carolina in the Southern Conference indoor games on March 7 again will be carried by Charlie Farson, Brodie Arnold and George Bagby. They were Carolina's outstanding performers last year. Farmers set a fast record of 6.4 for the 60 yard dash. The games are a feature of the Wake relay's spring athletic carnival.

Labor Supply Unlimited After all the supply of manual labor is almost boundless here, with a vast primitive peasant folk to draw upon. But the supply of educated trained workers of the mind is limited. What inducement is there for an ambitious boy to study when the best things that Soviet life has to offer can be more easily attained by becoming a foundryman, or a bricklayer? I know of Moscow young men perfectly capable of obtaining an education who prefer to hide themselves among the favored manual workers, the aristocrats of the new era.

Oil Wells Ends Grave Digging MIDLAND, Tex., March 4.—S. J. Eason, cemetery sexton, dug graves here until his grandson, Bobby Allen dug a 75,000 barrel oil well in Oklahoma City. Since then Eason, the nearest relative of Allen, a minor orphan, has dug no more graves.
