does just one thing—but does that right. It makes the skin like velvet and keeps it so. It is soothing and healing to the skin, cures chaps and roughness, does it quickly and without the possibility of harm. It is entirely absorbed and does not leave the skin sticky or greasy. Only leaves the faint, delicate odor of Carnations.

Has all the merits of other good anti-chap lotions and some merits of its own.

BACK THEM UP.

At last what believers in forest conservation has asked for so long has happened—a man has been sent to jail for three months for leaving fire in a forest. Forest protection is as much a moral question as it is a political or administrative question. The public has for a long time believed that stealing a ham or setting fire to a woodshed were crimes for which the perpetrator should be sent to jail, but that to send a man to jail for setting fire to a forest was a cruel and brutal thing to do. This was so, though the burned woodshed might be worth $50 and the burned forest worth $50,000, it was also in spite of the fact that homes and even lives might be endangered by the forest fire. It is only lately that the public conscience has been sufficiently aroused to agree that it is proper to fine men for burning down forests.

FROM PRIVATE TO BRIGADE MAJOR.

LONDON, Jan. 21.—An illustration of the new spirit that has come over the British army, in which formerly it was exceedingly rare for a private soldier to become a commissioned officer is seen in an official announcement of the promotion of Capt. J. H. S. Dimmer to be a Brigade Major. Captain Dimmer enlisted as a private soldier in 1902, and obtained a commission in 1907 in recognition of his first class career. He won the Victoria Cross in the fourth month of the present war. He was sent in 1906 to study army methods in Belgium and Germany.

WOMAN HAS THRILLING EXPERIENCES IN TRENCHES

By P. M. Sarie, United Press Staff Correspondent.

LONDON, Dec. 28.—(By Mail).—Thrilling personal experience in the Belgian trenches are related by Miss Jessica Borthwick, niece of the late Lord Glenesk, who has just returned to England to enlarge the equipment of the field ambulance corps which she organized in conjunction with Dowager Lady Suffolk, Lord Methuen and others, and whose work she has been superintending.

"The other day," she said, "I was standing in the road on the way to Dixmude talking with an officer when a shell fell, taking off his left arm completely as though it had been chopped off with an axe, killing five others and shattering a nearby house to the ground. A cow standing near was also killed, but another a few yards away simply looked round and went on eating. For a moment I felt stunned, but was conscious of a shower of every kind of stone and dirt. One man, not otherwise wounded, was struck dead and dum by the shock.

"That night we went to Dixmude. The Germans were holding the country one side of the town, the Allies that on the other. We left our ambulance on this side of the canal and carried our stretchers over the bridge and through the main street. Germans hidden in cellars fired upon us as we passed.

"Some of the strange contrasts of the war were seen on this journey. On one side of the bridge, piles of German dead, saturated with kerosene, were being burned. The green waters of the canal were running peacefully on; and in them Belgian soldiers, in the half hours between the fighting, were calmly fishing, though nothing unusual was happening.

"The moon was full that night. It shone over a flat country in which one or two trees were still left standing. When we got near the trenches we lay down flat in order not to show up a gain, and the Belgians, who were calmly fishing, were suddenly startled by the firing of our machine guns. They were carried back three or four times, to the bridge over the canal, and taken into a little house. One of the few that had been left standing. One man died that night. The others were removed as soon as possible to the base hospital.

"It is sometimes very difficult to do anything for the poor fellows. One Belgian was wounded in the head, and he kept tearing the bandage off. He continually cried for chocolate, and no sooner did he get it than he grew quite calm and sane. Hot coffee or beef essence being a man round better than anything else, and it is one of the purposes of my present visit to England to arrange for a small hospital field kitchen so we can supply hot drinks to the wounded in the trenches before we carry them back."

Miss Borthwick recently received from the Belgian War Office the honorary rank of corporal in recognition of her valuable service.

Lady Smith-Dorrien, wife of Gen. Sir Horace Lockwood Smith-Dorrien, commanding the second British Army Corps had made an appeal on behalf of the horses, whose needs in the present war have been all but overlooked by the people of England.

"War without horses would be impossible," she writes, "and the frightful loss caused by modern weapons is creating a shortage in horses absolutely unprecedented. It behoves all therefore to do their utmost not only to endeavor to save as many horses as possible for patriotic reasons, but because it is our duty also to endeavor to ease the suffering of those poor faithful animals."

"Our dumb Friends League started the Blue Cross Fund, while the French Government have officially recognized its existence and gratefully accepted its offer of help for the horses."

The French Minister of War has not only authorized the installation of horse hospitals in France, but has given every possible facility to the Blue Cross hope to open light base hospitals for wounded horses during this month."

TALES TOLD BY MEN IN THE FIGHTING LINES

"One man in the Life Guards was very particular about his appearance," says Trooper Walter Dale, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, "and even in war time always carried a little hand mirror with him. I happened to pass him on the field when he had been badly wounded. There he lay with the glass in his hand curling his mustache. I had to pass on that time, but the next journey we went to take him to the hospital, it was too late. He was dead and his glass was still clenched in his hand. His mustache had been curled till it was a beauty."

Sergt. T. Bayley, at Dundee, listed this: "A man of the Gordons, fifty-five years ago, because the Greenock girl he wanted preferred another chap who was earning a few shillings a week more. One day when wounded he noticed another British soldier belonging to a Scottish regiment whose face seemed familiar. He crawled over and found it was every house down whom he had been thrown over. He bore no ill will, and started talking, when he found that this chap in turn had been thrown over for another man, who also was jilted and was actually serving in the same regiment as the first man, though they didn't know each other."

"A FALSE ALARM."

Bombardier Slyth, Royal Field Artillery, writes to his father: "We had a false alarm last night. Everyone was cheering and singing 'God Save the King' when somebody said 'Peace Declared!' But this time there was the usual pop-pop of rifles and Maxim guns and some silly ass had put the 'war scare news' round. I see the Kaiser is determined to get to Calais. He will 'get' it like he 'got' Paris. It's a long, long way to Calais."

We were in a house the Huns started shelling. The shells dropped all round, but not one of them touched us. They were trying to find our 6 in. howitzers, which are doing a lot of damage to the Kaiser's troops. They fire a shell of lyddite weigh-

FOOD SOURING IN STOMACH CAUSES INDIGESTION, GAS

"Pape's Diapepsin" ends all stomach Distress in five Minutes

Wonder what upset your stomach—which portion of the food did the damage—do you? Well, don't bother. If your stomach is in a revolt; if sour, gassy and upset, and what you just ate has fermented into stubborn lumps; head dizzy and aches; belch gases and acids; eructate undigested food; breath foul, tongue coated—just take a little Pape's Diapepsin and in five minutes you wonder what became of the indigestion and distress.

Millions of men and women today know that it is needless to have a bad stomach. A little Diapepsin occasionally keeps this delicate organ regulated and they eat their favorite foods without fear.

If your stomach doesn't take care of your liberal limit without rebellion; if your food is a damage instead of a help, remember the quickest, surest, most harmless relief is Pape's Diapepsin which costs only fifty cents for a large case at drug stores. It's truly wonderful—it digests food and sets things straight, so gently and easily that it is really astonishing. Please, for your sake, don't go on with a weak, disordered stomach; it's so unnecessary.

HOUSEHOLD HINTS

For Busy Housewives

A hot shovel held over varnished furniture will take out white spots. Iron the shirtwaists on the wrong side first, and they will look much nicer.

If cheese is wrapped in a cloth moistened with vinegar, it will neither dry nor mold.

Cooking in a double boiler is sometimes very slow. One can raise the temperature by adding a teaspoonful of salt to the outer vessel.

A broken shoe string is a hindrance when one is in haste. Sew the ends together flat with strong thread, and it will pass through the eyelets as before.

When washing Irish crochet lace, you will find that if you pin it out to dry (as you would a lace curtain), instead of ironing it, the lace will retain its new and hand-made look.

One cupful of rock salt, one cupful of unslaked lime, and eight gallons of boiling water makes an inexpensive and excellent brine for keeping eggs. Stir the brine occasionally until cool and pack the eggs in it.

If, instead of wasting energy by scouring your bathtubs and white enameled sinks with soap or cleansing powder, you try a soft cloth dampened with gasoline, you will find that all stains will be instantly removed, at small expense of labor.

One of the best ways to clean vinegar bottles and cruets, which easily become discolored, is to fill them with charcoal that has been pounded into fine pieces, but not powdered. Pour clean soap-suds over the charcoal and allow it to stand for a few hours.

White blotting-paper should be used under the doilies or covers of tables, dressers, or wherever a vase of flowers or pitchers may be set. If a vase be overturned, the blotting-paper will absorb all the water before it reaches the polished surface beneath.

If an egg is accidentally broken, and you have no immediate use for it, beat it thoroughly, spread on a plate and allow it to dry. The next time that you use your meat grinder, put this through first. Put it away to use in settling coffee. It is one of the greatest helps on a camping trip, and an item of economy in the home, as in this way one egg will answer for three days.

Make an apron like a clothespin apron, only stitch so as to make at least two pockets. Slip it on over your other apron, when doing the bedroom work. You will be surprised how many steps it will save. Things to be taken up or down stairs, or into other rooms, can be put into the apron.—Suburban Life.

"ON FRIENDLY TERMS."

Private Angus Royan, of the Seaforth Highlanders, writes: "We are very close to the Germans just now; so close, in fact, that we can hear them talking and sometimes singing, although I can't see what they have to sing about."

The other night they had a gramophone playing in one of their trenches and it must have broken down, for one of them shouted across to me in quite good English, "Hey, you chaps, can any of you mend a gramophone? This one has got broken." One of our fellows told him to bring it across and he would do his best, but he was afraid he could not do much with it, as it was probably made in Germany and therefore beyond all help.

Another fellow shouted across that he knew all about us, and that he was a barber in Argyle Street, Glasgow. So you see, we are on quite friendly terms with them. I will have to stop this, as it is getting dark, and the electric lighting arrangements in the trenches are not quite completed yet.

If I have tried to do my best. And fail for lack of strength or skill. If I have brought into the test. All that I have of worth and will. And then go down unto defeat. I need not fear God's judgment when I kneel before His judgment seat.

God does not say that we must win. Nor are the souls of failures lost; The weakest of us shall get in. If when our barks were tempest tossed. We tried to steer our course aright. If I have lived up to every task; And honest effort in the fight. Is all that God Himself will ask.
