wasn't a henpecking lock. It was like the unreasonable anger of a person who loves another a great deal when the other has put himself in mortal danger. Mr. Winkle realized that he was regarding Amy in the same way. It was the closest approach to the unknown element about war he had had but had not yet found. He and Amy were trying desperately to protect themselves by taking up their individual lives independently and without the need of the other.

Sergeant Technician Wilbert George Winkle would have preferred to be alone in one of the upper berths rather than occupying a lower berth with Corporal Technician Tinker. But that was the way the Army said it was to be on the troop train roaring through the cold night, and that was the way it was. Mr. Tinker, besides taking up most of the space with his bulk, leaving only a few inches for Mr. Winkle, was in addition restless because, having boarded the train at night, none of them even knew which direction it was going. All they were sure of was that they were being shipped to an embarkation port. Mr. Tinker, nearly knocking Mr. Winkle out of the berth, and stared out the window "Not a star," he said. "Maybe I couldn't read, but anyway, but you say you can."

WEDDING BELLS

Hancock-Richards. A very pretty wedding was solemnized on Nov. 17th, when Miss Martha Hancock, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hancock of Melville, became the bride of James Preston Richards of Gladstone, son of Alexandra and the late Mrs. Richards, and was performed by the Pastor, Rev. Harvey Bishop. Mrs. Lester M. Beaton, sister of the groom, acted as bridesmaid, while Mr. Lester Beaton, supported the groom. After signing the register, the happy party drove to Borden and then to Summerside where they took lunch at Olympic Restaurant. They then drove back to Charlottetown where they were joined by several relatives. The bride and groom were met by the bride's home at Melville, where they were met by a happy group amid shouts and cheers and blowing of horns. After receiving congratulations the happy party set down to supper at a table that glowed with good things to satisfy the appetites of all. The table was very artistically decorated and centered by two wedding cakes. The bride and groom then took their places to receive the beautiful presents that were bestowed upon them and the groom thanked them all for the gifts. His bride also responded inviting them all to come to visit them in their home at Gladstone. The groom was accompanied by three bridesmaids and three cheerleaders and three ladies bounced the bride. Previous to their marriage the people of Melville held a shower, where Mrs. Richards received a lovely lot of useful gifts showing the high esteem in which she is held by them.

Under pelting rains, British and American forces have slogged through mud and fought over craggy mountains to sleep for miles in their twin drive along the hard road to Rome. Fierce storming of the Magliore and Carina by General Clark's Fifth Army against the desperate determination to prevent a break-through produced one of the bitterest fighting of the campaign.

On the night of Dec. 3, the people of Gladstone, Murray Harbour and Murray River, held a shower at the home of the groom's father, Mr. Alexandra Richards. The evening was joyously spent playing games and a sing-song with Miss Addie Mabey at the organ, accompanied by Mrs. Frank Mac-

Farlane. Everyone was delighted to hear the soprano voice of dear Mrs. Mabey who has passed her eighty-seventh birthday. Mrs. Mabey's chief pleasure is to sing. Clarence Cuddy with his quick step and quick voice brought the people to silence saying he need not tell the people why they were there tonight, because God said it was the bride and groom every happiness in their married life.

so Jim chose Martha to be his wedded wife, until death do them part. An address was read by Miss Jean Cuddy and a well filled purse was presented by Mr. George Saunders. A lunch was served by the ladies after which the party broke up at a late hour by wishing the bride and groom every happiness in their married life.
