Splendid Radio Concert by C. F. C. Y.

Wednesday and Thursday nights of this week will long be remembered with pleasure by many radio fans. Through the kindness of Mr. W. E. Burke and Major K. S. Rogers of the Island Radio Company, Station CFCY broadcast Wednesday night a song recital by Miss Lucy Blanchard and Mr. Albert Blanchard, interspersed with several numbers by the Casino Dance Orchestra. Judging by the number of telephone calls and the heavy mail received at the Station the program was greatly appreciated.

Last evening a beautifully balanced and splendidly rendered program was presented by Prof. W. E. Fletcher and Mrs. Fletcher who sang several solos, among which may be particularly mentioned "The Hills of Donegal," "Rose of My Heart" sung by Mrs. Fletcher, "A Little Prayer for Me" and "Smilin' Thru," sung by Prof. Fletcher. "The Rosary," sung as a duet by Prof. and Mrs. Fletcher was particularly beautiful.

The second in a series of agricultural talks was given last evening by Mr. A. W. Peterson of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, who took as his subject the "honey industry in its relationship to P. E. I." It was a very interesting and instructive address for all who were fortunate enough to hear it. Next Thursday Dr. J. J. Allen, Pathologist at the Fox Experimental Station, will deliver the third lecture of the series, which will be of particular interest to fox men.

Station CFCY will be on the air again for both services of Trinity United Church on Sunday.

Some Phases of Education

qually as could be found anywhere in the world. Prince Edward Island had the lowest provincial and community debts in the Dominion, and its taxes were also the lowest, but low taxes was no indication of progress. With 614 classrooms, and teaching according to the enrollment of 17,000 pupils. In one quarter of the schools the attendance was less than twenty scholars, and the decrease in the number of enrolled pupils in thirty years was about 6,000. According to the growth of population of former years the population of P. E. I. should today be about 200,000.

The result of the standard, said the speaker, was that the educational system had also been at a standstill, and the same number of schools was in use as when the population was twenty thousand. The consequence was that education in the rural districts was carried on in small and therefore inefficient schools many of them having only eight or ten pupils. The cost of education was correspondingly increased, and the lecturer estimated that in the twenty smallest schools in Queen's County, there were altogether only 134 pupils, costing the Province $12,000 annually, or $90 per pupil. On the other hand twenty schools with an attendance of over twenty pupils, having a total of 600, being educated at a cost of $14,000 or less than $30 a head.

Some of the smallest schools cost as much as $150 a head, and forty percent of all the schools were dangerously near those figures. Some of the school districts had as low as ten rate payers, and the result of these had been to keep down taxes, a supplement that failed to attract competent teachers, and poor and improperly maintained school equipment. Even the better classes of schools were unable to give the education that was demanded by present day civilization. In fact the small rural schools who were educated in the past, and those who were educated in the present in most cases not able to secure the broadness of vision and the understanding that was necessary to make a success of life. The Province was really wasting $100,000 of the half million dollars that it invested yearly in education. How secure better and more efficient schools was a difficult problem to solve and one that was no further ahead than twenty five years, when consolidation had been first suggested.

The average cost of education per pupil for 1924 was $28. In Nova Scotia it was $30. According to the actual attendance it cost in Prince Edward Island $42 per pupil, and in Nova Scotia $40. Attendance in P. E. I. was lower in spite of the fact that it was more closely populated. In fact only about 11,000 of its 17,000 scholars attended daily. The time was coming when something had to be done.

The speaker recalled that a committee had been formed in 1908 to consider consolidation, and if the iggibles each three times the size and the number of the total amount of that prevailing in the Maritime as stagnant. A hearty vote of thanks, moved by Dr. J. C. Houston, seconded by Mr. Rouben MacDonald, and supported by Mr. George Tweedy, Major McNitt, Mr. John Anderson, Pr. S. Stele, Mr. W. P. Doull and Mr. Henry Fitzgerald, was tendered the lecturer by the Chairman, Mr. James McIsaac. It was announced that the lecturer for next Thursday night would be R. V. J. J. McDonald, Summerside, who will describe his recent trip to Rome.

vance. At 10 a. m. A. & C. companies reached the firing line about 18 hundred yards from the Boers trenches. D. & E. companies formed the support and B. F. G. and H. the reserve. The Cornwallis and the Highland brigade were on the South of the River on the right and the Shropshires and Gordons on the left. The Boers had the positions marked and began firing at long range but the Canadians valiantly advanced across the open plain towards their invisible foe until their right was within four hundred yards from the enemy and their left eight hundred. The day was intensely hot. There was no shelter from the sun and little from the enemy's bullets but the men were quick to seize the depressions in the land or friendly ant hills for cover and kept up a steady fire at the bursts of smoke and flame that told where the enemy's sharpshooters were stationed. Over them the Mauser bullets whistled; continually about them the hot sand puffed in their faces as bullets buried themselves in it, and occasionally a cry of pain told that some comrade was hit. One of the first to receive a mortal wound was gallant Capt. Arnold, and three of the stretcher bearers were wounded in carrying him from the firing line. He was borne to the rear only by the assistance of Surgeon Capt. Piest who dressed his wounds under fire.

Even the reserves were not saved from the Boer marksmen and four of H Company were wounded, 1600 yards away from the Boer position. Early in the afternoon D. and E. companies and part of B company were brought forward to reinforce the firing line. One Canadian Maxim gun had been brought across the river and had taken up a position one thousand yards on the left and helped to keep down the Boer fire.

At four in the afternoon three companies of the Duke of Cornwall's light infantry under Colonel Aldworth joined the Canadians and Colonel Otter was told by the Cornwallis' commander that "he had been sent to finish this business, and proposed doing it with the bayonet." As the Cornwallis entered the firing line they were met by a savage fusillade from the enemy. At 5.15 p.m. all the Canadians except a part of G and H companies were in the firing line, and at this moment Aldworth ordered a general advance. There was a wild rush for the enemy's trenches, a mad rush against the hidden foe, but after advancing two hundred yards the rush was stopped by a murderous fire. The plain was strewn with dead and dying, among whom was Aldworth whose ill advised order had cost the attacking forces so dearly. However the ground gained was held until darkness fell on the scene of battle. Orders were then given to collect dead and wounded and to retire to the drift. Even this was hazardous work, for in the darkness on the left the Boer marksmen were still watching the field and until 10 p. m. continued to snipe the men engaged in this work of mercy. It had been a costly day for the British army and as lastly for the Canadians as for any of the regular forces—18 of them were killed, 63 wounded and 2 missing. And the sad part of it all was that this battle should never have been fought. Cronje was surrounded.
