P. E. Island Cook On Frigate Wins High Acclaim

At Sea Aboard the Frigate H. M. C. S. Swansea: In 23 months at sea Leading Cook LeRoy Howatt, R. C. N. V. R., of Victoria, P. E. I., didn't let a single day pass without serving at least a full course meal. And in the world's worst bad weather area, this North Atlantic convoy run, that's a record to regard with pride.

Working with him is Cook Wallace Walters, R. C. N. V. R., of Halifax, who has been earning the gratitude of the ship's company on this trip by turning out 100 loaves of bread each night. In spite of storm-tossed waters, that and bread pans flying about the galley. And his product is good.

"It isn't so hard, provided you have patience," says Howatt of cooking a la gale. "When the ship is taking 45 degree rolls making the soup is a bit difficult — or rather, keeping it is difficult. You put irons on the stove to hold the pots, and you get your pans good and hot so that the eggs will stick and not slide. There's nothing much more hazardous than half-cooked half-fried eggs sliding around the galley floor."

"Cooking in heavy weather means much more work for everyone in the galley, because you have to put so much more effort into the same amount of cooking. But the men aboard don't mind giving a hand—they all take a great interest in food. If the ship takes a heavy roll just before lunch you can almost hear a groan from stem to stern—wonder if that got the soup?"

Baking at sea was necessary this trip because we ran out of bread. Walters, who was professional baker for 14 years in peaco time, promptly came to the rescue. Because the galley stove was required all day for meals, he slept in the daytime and worked all night, even turning out some rolls before the dawn.

"Do I ever do any cooking when I go home to the wife? Well, my life," said Howatt, "my wife is a good cook—also!"
