OCTOBER 27, 1892.

A Meeting Called.

A meeting of citizens has been arranged for 7 o'clock in the afternoon at 4 o'clock, in the Chamber of Commerce, to consider the proposed hotel at here of a summer hotel. It is to be hoped there will be a large and representative gathering, and that this vexed and oft deferred hotel question will now be settled to the best advantage of the community.

School Savings Banks.

In the annals of the American Academy Mrs. Oberholzer gives an account of the School Savings Banks. Wherever tried these banks have given a great stimulus to this method of inculcating thrift. When will we realize the idea of having a savings bank in every public school! With a view to encourage the greatest diffusion of this system, we quote at some length from Mrs. Oberholzer's paper:

"The idea of School Savings Banks dates back to 1834 when Dulac first introduced it in a communal school in Le Mans, France. No general thought was given to the subject until some years later though the system was established in Wurtemberg in 1846 and in Buda-Pesth in 1866. In 1866, Professor Laurent, of the University of Ghent, appreciating the practical value of School Savings Banks, devoted some time to advancing and explaining their advantages to educators and people going from one school to another in his philanthropic mission. As the result of this effort a number of school banks were opened in Belgium, and during the year closing July, 1891, some $800,000 were deposited by the children. Banks were also established in Germany and France and were later introduced in Italy and Holland. France, which now leads the world in this movement, owes her progress in this department of education to Monsieur A. C. Marlice, who doubtless sits to-day, as usual, in his Paris study pondering on the condition of the system in 23,000 schools in the French Republic, or compiling statistics of their relative economics. He has for twenty years devoted his life to this work. After starting the subject in Europe, he reported that nothing could afford greater amelioration to the poor than the careful Institution of School Savings Banks. Monsieur Marlice formulated a system, born of his thoughtful study and accumulated knowledge, and under the protection of the government it is now in use throughout France, 23,375 schools receive and care for the savings of the children, and 478,173 pupils have opened accounts in the Savings Banks, where their deposits aggregate 12,683,312 francs. The French acknowledge this practical inculcation of economy, this equalisation of wealth, as a most reliable reform factor. A contribution of one franc or a half-franc to start a school account, given to a child, or better, an opportunity shown him how to earn the same amount, instill the initial letter of economy quite as effectually. The system is also in use in Germany, Hungary, Russia, Switzerland, Denmark, Holland and England, but administered often by private associations. Manchester and Liverpool, in England, have the system in general use since the Free Educational Act went into effect. In Manchester, where the increased attendance is upward of two thousand no less than five thousand new accounts have been opened in School Savings Banks. The work of promoting Savings Banks in American schools was entrusted to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and Mrs. Oberholzer is the lady who has charge over that department. From her account of the way in which it has been taken up in the United States, there would seem to be little difficulty in the way of introducing the system here. Mrs. Oberholzer says:—

"The school authorities are usually in good accord with the idea of teaching economy in the schools; the teachers themselves in most instances noted are enthusiastic in the work. The children enter with zest into the accumulation of their earnings and savings while the development of their individuality and self-dependence is a matter of general comment. When the system is about to be instituted the teacher explains to the scholars the end and aim of School Savings Banks, that it is to teach them the practical value of money, how it grows by attention, the benefits of industry, the delight of giving and spending wisely with other salutary lessons in thrift as opportunity occurs. The roll is called every Monday morning for the collection of the children's savings. This occupies a very short time, even the morning the work is instituted. Each child who is a depositor has the little Savings Bank card on the face of which is his name, that of the teacher and the school; on the back are the regulations. The card is folded and on the inside is the date for each Monday in the school year with space opposite for amount of deposit. The collections are first deposited in the bank as a general school fund. When a scholar has deposited an amount that the authorities may agree on he is given a bank book and the money is placed to his personal credit by the bank. The check with which pupils withdraw their money requires the signature of parent or guardian and principal. We have given this system a trial for two years in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania, now having it in use in sixty of our schools. We have heard no disparaging word of it save from the cigarette and candy vendors who complain that it injures their trade."

Hints for Travellers.

Nausea, from the motion of the car, may be prevented, says The Ladies' Home Journal, in the following way: Take a sheet of writing paper large enough to cover both the chest and stomach, and put it on under the clothing, next to the person. If one sheet is not large enough, paste the edges of two or three together, for the chest and stomach must be well covered. Wear the paper thus as long as you are travelling, and change it every day if your journey is a long one. Those who have tried it say that it is a perfect defense. Those to whom the term "sleeper" is a hollow mockery may profit by the experience of salesmen and others who travel frequently, and have the bed made up with the pillow toward the locomotive. Just why this should make sleep easier is not explained, but the plan is highly recommended. If you are ever in straits for a clean handkerchief or two when no washerwoman is within easy call, try this plan: Upon reaching your hotel take all your soiled handkerchiefs, wash and rinse them, and spread them out smoothly on the window panes. Be sure that there are no creases, and that the corners form right angles. When dry and carefully folded, no one could tell that they had not been ironed. Heavily embroidered handkerchiefs will not look as smooth as plain ones, but will certainly defy detection across a car aisle.

The Charm of Good Manner.

Perhaps the greatest charm in either man or woman—that which is most to win our liking—is manner. How often we see a man who at the very outset wins the esteem and regard of every one he addresses. A whole souled, cordial yet dignified and modest manner is a fine heritage, and I in common with all my sex, like the man who possesses it. I like a man who preserves a certain dignity but yet is plain; who is open and frank and looks you honestly in the face; who speaks out confidently, yet calmly, modestly yet firmly; who is neither bluff nor blunt, but yet free and simple. I like a man who is natural; but if a man who is naturally too rough, too loud, too curt or too brutal, I like him better when he shows himself able to conquer these defects.
