BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

(By Thornton W. Burgess)

That fair for me is fair for you
And the reverse is just as true.
—Sammy Jay.

What Sammy says is very true. Turn and turn about is one of the rules by which the Green Forest Folk live. Mother Nature has arranged it that way. What is fair for one must be fair for another and all the folk in fur and feathers, big folks and little folks, know it and live accordingly. Peter Rabbit dosen't think it is unfair that Reddy Fox should try to catch him. He knows that Reddy does it only because he must eat in order to live, and most of his food must be meat because from the beginning Old Mother Nature has meant it to be that way. So Reddy must try to be smart enough to catch Peter and Peter must try to be smart enough not to be caught. Both know this and all is fair between the hunter and the hunted. Each tries to outsmart the other. It is just so with all the other wild folk.

Two of the smartest of the Green Forest folks are Chatterer the Red Squirrel and Sammy Jay. You see, size has nothing to do with smartness. There are big smart folks and there are small smart folks. Some of the smallest are the smartest. Chatterer and Sammy are not friends, nor are they exactly enemies. Neither is big enough for the other to be really afraid of him. But each thinks he is smarter than the other, and never misses a chance to prove it. But should a common danger appear whichever one discovered it would promptly warn the other. Meanwhile they scream at each other and call each other names whenever they are in the same neighborhood. It seems to be their way of having a good time. And each dearly loves to outsmart the other.

This morning Sammy had quite by accident made a discovery that set him to chuckling. It was silent down inside chuckling. He had found one of Chatterer's storehouses filled with acorns, and they were where he, Sammy, could get them. He had found storehouses of Chatterer's before, but usually there was no way for Sammy to get into them. But this one was a hollow in a tree, not too deep and with an opening big enough for Sammy to go in and out of with ease. He had happened to see Chatterer pop into it with an acorn in his mouth, when he came out he didn't have it in his mouth. He looked sharply all around to see if he was being watched. Sharp as his eyes are he didn't see Sammy Jay. He hurried away. No sooner was he out of sight than Sammy was at that storehouse peeping inside. All he saw were dry leaves. He pulled two or three of these aside and there were the acorns he was so sure he would find there.

Now Sammy, being one of the thrifty folk, had a couple of hiding places, storehouses if you please to call them that, of his own. One he already had filled. "I'll just fill that other one with these," he chuckled, and began carrying the acorns from Chatterer's storehouse to his own empty one. It was in the opposite direction from his full one. Each time he returned to Chatterer's storehouse he first made sure that Chatterer was not in the neighborhood. Until he was sure of this he moved slowly and carefully, but once sure the way was clear he moved fast. He flew straight to that hollow, picked up an acorn and was away so quickly that had you been there you would have seen little more than a flash of blue. He was a busy person, was Sammy Jay.

Now at the very same time Chatterer also was a very busy person. Wholly by chance he had seen Sammy Jay at a certain place acting as if he was doing his best to make sure no one was watching him. As soon as Sammy left Chatterer went to see what Sammy had been doing. And so it was that he found Sammy Jay's filled storehouse.

Chatterer chuckled. He chuckled and chuckled. Then he went to work. And how he did work! As fast as those small legs of his could take him, and that is pretty fast, he raced back and forth between Sammy's storehouse and one of his own, but not the one that Sammy was so busy emptying. So neither knew what was happening to his own supplies and each was chuckling over his own smartness. It was turn and turn about, but both had yet to find it out.

Contract Bridge

By Josephine Culbertson

CONCERNING SHUTOUT BIDS

Shutout bids often keep the opponents from giving each other sufficient information, thus making it difficult or even impossible for them to reach their best contract. Sometimes, however, one preemptive bid is not enough—the partner must also do his share to rob the opponent of their full opportunity. Consider this case:

West dealer.
North-South vulnerable.

	♠ K 10 8 2 ♥ 9 6 ♦ A 8 6 5 4 3 ♣ 8
♠ 6 3 ♥ 5 2 ♦ Q 9 ♣ A K Q 8 7 5 4	N W E S	♠ Q ♥ Q J 8 4 ♦ 10 7 ♣ J 10 6 3 2
	♠ A J 9 5 4 ♥ A K 10 7 3 ♦ K J 2 ♣ —

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
3 ♣	Pass	Pass	4 ♣
Pass	5 ♦	Pass	6 ♦
Pass	Pass	Pass

Neither East nor West felt it encumbent upon himself to sacrifice at seven clubs against the opposing six diamonds, and in fact the 1100-point penalty which would have resulted would not have represented a substantial saving.

Actually, North-South made a grand slam, but with the diamond queen and spade queen missing, they were right to stop at six-odd.

In all probability, North-South would not have reached any slam contract if East had been alert! With his hand, East should have acquired a good, healthy fright from his partner's shutout bid in clubs! If West's hand was so weak, outside of clubs, that it prompted a three-club opening, the East-West partnership was even weaker, due to East's length in the club suit itself and his lack of defensive tricks. Thus, East should have reconciled himself to taking a loss on the deal, and should have aimed his efforts toward limiting that loss. If the opponents reached no higher than game, East would have reason to be delighted; his one thought should have been to make it as hard as possible for them to reach a slam!

Thus, East should have bid at least four clubs immediately, and the even better forestalling maneuver was to jump to five clubs! South would have had quite a bidding problem at that level!
