RETURNS FROM UNITED KINGDOM - Miss Helen Ramsey, of the staff of Prince of Wales College, returned recently from a tour of England and Scotland, conducted by the Bureau of University Travel. She covered, with six other members from American universities, the districts in England and Scotland famous in literature. Starting from London in a seven passenger automobile they motored in a circular tour north to Wales, Chester and the Lake District where wordworth and the Lake poets lived and wrote. The Robert Burns country came next, followed by a stop at Glaston, a mythical home of McBeth, central figure in the great Shakespearean drama. Then back to London again, where they became acquainted with the streets and names associated with Dickens, Dr. Johnson, Rossetti and Carlyle. From London they followed the route of the Canterbury Pilgrims, made famous by Chaucer. The tour unfortunately was cut short because of the impossibility of getting hotel accommodations in some districts. Miss Ramsey noted a severe lack of bread in England. The meals generally were good, but slightly there is a very shilling eating on dinners but some restaurants get over this by a cover charge.
