Flowers Kingdom Jade has always been a much prized jewel but it is only within recent years that it has come into vogue in Occidental countries. The word Jade is derived from the Spanish "piedra de jade" or stone of the jades. The Spaniards explorers found the natives of Central and South America wearing jade ornaments to protect them against pain. One of the most interesting jade ornaments worn in olden times was a "tridle" which tinkled musically when the wearer walked. Jade is supposed to bestow the property of virtue upon the wearer and imperial personages were not allowed to remove their jade ornaments as they were accounted sacred and symbolic.

THE DIFFERENCE Mother (in tremor): "Bobby, why don't you get up and give your seat to your father? Doesn't it pain you to see him reaching for a strap?" Bobby (cheerily): "Not in a tram; but it does at home."

POPULARITY OF JADE It is a Chinese fancy down but tea has to stand and that the leaves of plants when draw.

Must Be Represented In Canada

The history of Britain's export trade to the Dominion does not differ in some respects, from that in regard to other markets. In the days when overseas merchants placed their orders in the United Kingdom, as the only country whence manufactured goods were obtainable, the manufacturer did not need to search for markets. The orders reached him either direct, or through merchant firms in the United Kingdom, practically without effort on his part. With the rise of great industrial nations such as the United States, and Germany, competition, formerly restricted to that of his fellow-manufacturers in the same branch of industry, assumed an international character and the problem of distribution assumed for the manufacturer, a degree of importance it had hitherto lacked. Many manufacturers then recognized the need for representation of some kind in the overseas market and today very large numbers of British firms, in almost every branch of industry, have agents in Canada. Although this is so, it sometimes appears as if some firms still assume what may be described as a passive attitude towards distribution or selling—a tradition born of a time when conditions were radically different from what they are today; they apparently assume Canadian firms will solicit business. The number of firms that can expect to do business successfully on these lines must be quite limited. Probably only those manufacturing products highly specialized in character, and for which substitutes are with difficulty obtainable, can expect to adopt this non-aggressive attitude. The Canadian buyer expects the seller, or his representative, to call on him, and discuss matters viva voce, and both Canadian and American manufacturers act in accordance with this expectation. British firms represented in the Dominion do so, but such firms as are not represented, and limit their activities to the despatch of circulars and catalogues, are still sufficiently numerous to have it pointed out to them, that their efforts are largely wasted.

Report of Mr. G. T. Milne, Senior British Trade Commissioner in Canada.

COHINOOR OR FOUNT OF LIGHT The Great Indian diamond called the Kohinoor, meaning "mountain of light" and once known as "the Great Mogul" is a treasure which has passed through many hands. It was owned in the fourteenth century by the Rajah of Malwa. In the seventeenth century it belonged to Aurangzeb the Great, who passed it on to his descendants. The gem has been so often stolen and was so generally coveted for its magnificence that Aurangzeb's great-grandson one day hid it in his turban. He invited him to a feast. At the feast the Shah insisted on their changing turbans "to cement their love," and thus the diamond fell into Nadir's hands, who gave it the name of "Kohinoor." It was presented to Queen Victoria in 1849. It then weighed 186 1/16 carats, but it has been recut and is now 106 1/16 carats.

SQUASH TURNS PEOPLE YELLOW Some of the inhabitants of northern Japan are becoming more yellow, not because they are becoming more Mongolian in characteristics, but because of an excessive consumption of squash in the fall of the year. So, at least, we are assured by a learned Japanese doctor. The gentleman, Dr. H. Hashimoto, seems to have proved that this so-called "false jaundice" in his patients is caused by the long-continued hearty partaking of this vegetable. The squash contains a yellow coloring matter called carotin, which the body eliminates slowly, and when overloaded with it the body is unable to excrete it fast enough, with the consequence that it colors the skin. The tint becomes particularly noticeable in the whites of the eyes, the palm of the hands, and the soles of the feet.

QUITE THE OPPOSITE. Mr. Goodpatter—You are getting on in years. You should turn your thoughts toward heaven. Mr. Oldsmith—On the contrary, I'm thinking of getting married again.

Don't Let That Cold Turn Into "Flu" Rub on Good Old Musterole That cold may turn into "Flu," Gripe or, even worse, Pneumonia, unless you take care of it at once. Rub good old Musterole on the congested parts and see how quickly it brings relief. Colds are merely congestion. Musterole, made from pure oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other simple ingredients, is a counter-irritant which stimulates circulation and helps break up the cold. As effective as the messy old mustard plaster, it does the work without the blister. Just rub it on with your finger-tips. You will feel a warm tingle as it enters the pores, then a cooling sensation that brings welcome relief. 40c and 75c, at all druggists. The Musterole Co. of Canada, Ltd., Montreal.

The Girl Who Had No Chance

By MARION RUBINCAM

RUTH DECIDES Chapter II Ruth went up the park, to the house in that complicated emotional state which only a very young girl can achieve. This is a statement that needs to be amplified. There are many girls of eighteen who have experienced every emotion whom they are capable of having, to whom nothing more can come as a surprise. These are not necessarily the sophisticated type of the big city. They are found as frequently and some say more frequently, in the small town.

But Ruth was not this sort. Instinctively she kept away from the "fashionable" crowd who lived in country estates in the neighborhood, who rode and danced together and flirted in the moonlight. So almost automatically she fell in with a crowd of sweet and harmless children. As she grew up her studies took more and more of her time. Her father had made her read an unusual number of good books which had matured her mind so that flirtation for her was a waste of time. Myra might sit by the hour talking the most absurd nonsense while one of the boys laid her hand, but Ruth had better sense for her time.

Up to eighteen, then, she had not apparently fallen in love. She read better than any other boy she had met. He frequently took the same books she did, he was interested in his work, he was capable of carrying on a far more intelligent conversation than the other boys of her acquaintance. She liked being with him, she looked up to him as being extremely brilliant, she was sure he would be a great man. Beyond that she had not analyzed her feelings.

But this was a new emotion, and she lay awake hours thinking about it. Tim had not gone to the city because she must like very much to be with her; and, thinking this, she fell happily asleep. Next morning she had little time to think of anything. The woman who with her husband had taken the top floor of the house received a telegram that her sister was dead. So she gathered up her few possessions and left for her old home in the south that day. Her husband (who had left her a week before) going with her. They had already paid the rent for the first of the month, but Mrs. O'Neil was concerned about losing them.

The money paid for your father's medicine and came in for lots of things," she said. "I'm going to take the next month's rent and give it to Dr. Lane on account." "I gave him $25 on account. And he says he's coming again this morning," Ruth answered, looking up from her silver cleaning. "Never mind, mother, we'll get in new tenants."

But she wasn't so sure. Her mother thanked her for paying the bill. "Though I can't take your money, you may still get to New York with it, if I can manage to find some to put to it," she answered. "If I can get some more people for rooms, now to the top floor and began cleaning the empty rooms—in case the vague 'new tenants' should materialize. Tim stayed home from New York because she couldn't go—he liked to be with her enough to sacrifice a great opportunity! How many other men would do a thing like that for a mere girl! It was very romantic—Tim was romantic, though she hadn't thought of it before.

Ruth stopped to look out the window at the wind-blown world beyond the garden. What a nice name Tim was. What a nice boy. She put her hand to her heart, which was beating so hard she could feel it. Suppose she was in love! "Ruth, come down when you're through Dr. Lane's here," her mother called. "All right, I will," Ruth came back to earth and her task. But of course she wasn't in love with Tim around, she decided, rubbing the furniture with a dust cloth. She would not have thought to stay home—Tim had.

Tim, then, was in love with her. And this sudden thought, bursting in upon her mind, made Ruth completely forget her work. She sat in the middle of the floor dust rag in hand, and thought over this delicious idea for a long time. Indeed, it was Dr. Lane's voice that brought her back. She went downstairs. Doctors always order a change of scene," her mother was saying, rather crossly. "I'm not ordering it; I know how things are," the physician said, greeting Ruth with a smiling nod. "Only he frets here, and its getting cold weather, he worries—it isn't good for him. New scenes, new faces, new associations—"

"Why don't you and father go and visit Aunt Sarah Ruth said to her mother. "Go—you know why." "We have $75 we can spare," the girl said calmly. That's enough for the railroad fare. Father would like to see his sister again, he's often said so. And it's South it would be warm."

So Ruth decided. And the rest of the hundred-dollar bill was spent. Tomorrow—Love Story

ITALIANS FEARS EVIL EYE

In Italy superstitious folk wear a little horn of coral or ivory on a necklace of watchman to avoid the evil of the "Evil Eye." Carters sling a bull's horn under their wagons for the protection of their horses. Workmen and even babies are frequently seen attired in red caps. The caps are a sign that the persons wearing them have fallen under the spell of the "jettatura" or "Evil Eye" and must wear a scarlet cap for a mystic number of days in order that the curse may be lifted. Some of the most intelligent Italians believe that certain persons actually do possess this malignant power. Giuseppe Verdi the famous composer attributed the failure of two of his peras "Luisa Miller" in Naples and "Don Carlos" in Paris to the animosity of a "jettatura." Maestri late of Naples.

PROTECTS AGAINST POISON OAK

Among the Comanches in Texas years ago and among the Mission Indians in California it used to be customary to take a sprig of poison oak and thoroughly chew up both leaves and twigs, swallow the juice and spit out the residue of the fiber. This precaution on against poison oak. I have tried this treatment several times, with an perceptible ill effects, and on mountain hunting trips at times I have depended on a poison oak patch as the only available fodder for my horse. HELP FOR YOUNG WOMEN

Mrs. Holmberg Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her Viking, Alta.—"From the time I was 15 years old I would get such sick feelings in the lower part of my abdomen, followed by cramps and vomiting. This kept me from my work (I help my parents on the farm) as I usually had to go to bed for the rest of the day. Or at times I would have to walk the floor, suffered in this way until a friend induced me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have had very satisfactory results so far and am recommending the Vegetable Compound to my friends. I surely am glad I tried it for I feel like a different person now that I don't have these troubles." OPHELIA HOLMBERG, Box 93, Viking, Alberta. Letters like this establish the merits of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. They tell of the relief from such pains and ailments after taking it. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is made from natural roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and today holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills in this country, and thousands of voluntary testimonials prove this fact.
