Is it Risky to Marry a Man Whose Parents and Sister Made Unhappy Marriages? — Fighting Parents Who Wreck Children's Nerves — Kind Friend?

Dear Miss Dix—I am deeply in love with a young man to whom my family strongly object because of his family. His mother, though she is a remarkable housekeeper, is a mean and nagging woman and has driven her husband to seek enjoyment outside of his home—that is, playing cards, not gambling—and drinking with his friends.

I should say go on and marry your young man and be happy. Your parents are only bluffing. All of this old heavy father business of turning a girl out into the cold world because she marries the man she wants instead of her father's and mother's choice, calls for a laugh now instead of weeps.

Any intelligent girl, who has sense enough to hold down a good job and earn her own bread and butter, is perfectly capable of picking out her own husband, and all the father and mother have a right to do is to sign on the dotted line and give her their blessing.

If your young man came from a family in which there was insanity, or which was afflicted with some inheritable disease, your parents would be right to try to keep you from marrying him, but the idea that he is bound to be a nagger because his mother is, and a drunkard because his father has been driven to drink, and that your marriage will end in the divorce court because his sister's did, is so ridiculous that one can hardly take it seriously.

As for children "taking after" their fathers and mothers and following in their footsteps, it works around the other way quite as often. Many a boy has a perfect horror of drink because in his childhood he saw his father in his cups. Many a girl makes the neatest of housekeepers because her mother was a sloven, and many a girl is gentleness and patience and amiability itself to her husband because she has always in her mind the picture of her poor intimidated father bending his head before her virago mother's nagging.

The most peaceful home I ever go into is presided over by a woman whose childhood was spent in a house of strife where there was continual quarrelling between her father and mother, and so determined was she not to make that kind of home that she never permits any argument on any subject whatever.

If your mother is determined that you shall never marry into any family in which there is a woman who nags, or a man who drinks, or in which there has been a divorce, you are doomed for spinsterhood. I believe that children should be largely guided by their parents in marriage, and that when the parents have some valid objection against a young man or a young woman, the children should respect it. But to break off a match because the parents don't happen to like the disposition of a young man's mother, or the father's habits, or because his sister was unlucky enough to marry a man who couldn't support her, is absurd, and a girl isn't called on to wreck her life's happiness and break her heart because her father and mother are narrow-minded and prejudiced.

If the young man himself had a bad temper, or if he drank, or even if he was divorced, there might be excuse for parental interference. But when it is only papa and mamma and sister they object to, it is beyond consideration. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix—My parents are always quarrelling with one another. Mother accuses father of going with other women, though I don't think this is true. She doesn't know the value of money and is always wanting more than Dad can afford to give her and says that he should give her the money that he is giving to that woman he is supposed to be going with. She says these things before the children and my two young brothers are getting so they don't respect father, and stay away from home as much as they can, because no one likes to come home to a mother and father who are always fighting. I have tried everything to bring them to their senses, but have failed, and it has got on my nerves so that I feel that I cannot stay at home any longer.

Both of them love me dearly. Do you think if I went away it would help any? I have a business education and a good job. BABB.

I think that if you told them that you could not any longer endure such a place of discord as they make your home it might possibly bring them to their senses. It is worth trying and at any rate there is no use in your having your young life wrecked and your nerves shattered by continuing to live in a house that is not hating but a battleground. You have a right to peace even if you have to leave your father and mother to find it.

There is nothing else in the world so curious as the fact that married couples seem to think they have a perfect right to fight as much as they like and that what they say to each other is nobody's business. Not even their children's. They also feel that they have a perfect right to make for their children a home that is a hell on earth.

Apparently they never consider what the effect of the way that they treat each other is upon their children. They never stop to think that for a child to be brought up in a house of strife, to be compelled to assist in its

Colds wont spread if Nostrils are Cleansed. How to Avoid Coughs, Colds

Most cold troubles have their beginning in the delicate lining of the nose. Stop your cold at its beginning — with the first sniffle or sneeze use Catarrhazone Inhaler. It releases a healing vapor that destroys the bacteria which causes colds and other winter ailments. Catarrhazone cleans and disinfects the nostrils, clears away nasty discharges, relieves that stuffed-up feeling in the forehead.

How To Stop Colds

Catarrhazone — has successfully restored cases that resisted other remedies. "No one can know better than I the benefit one gets from the very first day's use of Catarrhazone," writes T. T. Hopkins of Westvale, "I Bronchial Catarrh, ear noises, headache for years a stubborn case of ache, sore eyes, stopped-up nose and throat. It affected my appetite and made my breath rank. Catarrhazone restored me quickly, and now keeps me free from colds."

Catarrhazone Brings Relief Quickly

parents' quarrels, and to be buffeted by their passions, wrecks its nerves and makes it subject to all sorts of neuroses that may blight its entire life. They never think that when they hurl insults at each other and accuse each other of all sorts of vile conduct, they are destroying the children's respect for them and that they are killing every particle of influence they might have over their boys and girls.

They never think that a child would be better off with no parents than with quarrelling ones, and that any asylum would be a better home than one in which hate dwells.

Surely, if parents could realize how miserable they make their children by their quarrels, they would deny themselves the pleasure of their daily spat. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I have a dear friend, who is a splendid, loyal husband, the father of seven children, to whom he is devoted. I know that his wife is unfaithful to him, but he does not suspect it. Shall I tell him? A READER.

Certainly not. Let him dwell in blissful ignorance as long as he can. His knowing that his wife is untrue to him would not help matters, because he could not make over her nature and make her loyal and faithful.

Perhaps he does know about his wife and is heroically pretending not to for the children's sake and to keep a home for them. For it is not easy for a man to know what to do with seven children if they have no mother. As long as he can keep up his pretense of ignorance he saves his face, but if you tell him of his wife's unfaithfulness and that everybody knows it, you will force him to divorce her to preserve his standing in the community. DOROTHY DIX.

"Say, I do like it!"

said DAVID McCOY, age 10 year

More proof that children take cod-liver oil willingly—this emulsified way. Like so many other youngsters, David McCoy, pictured above, hates plain cod-liver oil. His mother admitted it frankly when the Scott's Emulsion reporter recently called at her home at 187 Sackville St., Toronto. But Mrs. McCoy was anxious to see if David would feel any differently about Scott's Emulsion of Cod-Liver Oil, so she gladly consented to let him try it.

David took a spoonful. Then he grinned. "Say, I do like this," he said. "It tastes good!" Pleasanter to take—but that isn't all! Pale, underweight, run-down children — they need cod-liver oil. Give it to them the pleasant way—give them Scott's Emulsion.

Pleasanter to take—easier to digest! Mrs. MALCOLM MARTIN

There passed away in the P. E. I. Hospital on the morning of March 26th Mrs. Malcolm Martin, Grand View. She had been in failing health for some time, but only recently did her condition become such that an operation was found necessary. On Tuesday word had been received of the success of the operation, so that Thursday came as a great shock to friends and relatives. Born in Grand View in the year 1857, the daughter of Duncan and Mary Finlayson, she spent her life in Grand View. Her nephew, Alan Finlayson, is on the old homestead. Mrs. Martin will be missed by a large circle of friends. She is survived by her husband, Malcolm Martin.

Despite the bad conditions of the roads her funeral was largely attended. The service was conducted from the Orwell Head Church by Rev. D. M. Sinclair. The Choir sang "There will be no dark valley" and "Softly and Tenderly," two favorite hymns of the deceased which she had marked some time before her death in her hymn book, with the request that they be sung at her funeral.

"How will you have your Shredded Wheat this morning?"

"I'll have it with hot milk, my dear. It's a bit chilly out doors, and I want something to warm me up. It certainly is great the way you can serve Shredded Wheat as either a hot or cold cereal—and just as easily either way. Fickle spring can't fool us, can she? And be sure to have some Shredded Wheat yourself because it is what you need to keep strong and healthy in this kind of weather."
