INDIANS PAY BIG LAW FEES.

SULPHUR, Okla., Aug. 16.--Lawyers' expense accounts running as high as $300,000 as a single fee, already paid, amounting to $750,000, and containing fees still pending that would aggregate about $5,000,000, figured in the investigation of the Indian land affairs by the special committee appointed by the House of Representatives today.

It was pointed out that the Indians never obtained large amounts of money due them without having to pay large sums in the shape of fees and although they employed regular lawyers on yearly salaries, extra fees were constantly paid for the employment of special counsel. The special fee of $750,000 was paid several years ago to J. F. McMurray and his law partners after they prosecuted what is known as the "citizenship" case, which it was said kept off the rolls 32,000 persons who wanted to participate in the claims against the Government.

HOTELS AND AUTOMOBILES.

To the Editor of the Guardian: On my return to my native Island this year, I find much complaint regarding the falling off of tourist travel. Not all agree on causes. Some place the legislation which excludes automobiles as the supreme drawback. Others lay the trouble to the railroads and steamboats and still others to the hotels. If I were to attempt a diagnosis, I would be likely to lay it to all the causes named, each in greater or lesser degree.

I am from Vermont and we find in that state, in our search for summer tourists, that the first requisite is a place to stay, either boarding house or hotel. It stands to reason that no one is going to venture upon a rail or steamboat trip without knowing where to find a resting place when he gets to the end of his journey. It stands to reason then that there must be a home to go to for the weeks or months that one is away. For the reason that one lodges at the hotel a longer time than on a train or boat the hotel or boarding house must be attractive, pleasing and suitable to those who are expected to remain within its walls. The hotel, therefore, which caters for tourist trade must be of a quality and attractiveness to correspond with the prices charged. Thousands of persons leave their own comfortable homes to lodge in rooms that are ill-furnished, with poor beds and generally untidy and unpleasant. In hotels of that class the food is generally not of the highest standard. If the price, however, agrees with the accommodations and the food, there is peace and a prolonged stay. If the price is high, the visit will be cut short and there will be no return. I regret to say that the average hotel on the island, as those I refer to are the beach hotels during the hot season, houses like Shaw's at Brackley Beach or the Cliff. These hotels are always filled by American and Canadian people who enjoy the climate and simple, substantial and wholesome living, at a price that is reasonable, and satisfactory to the patrons who come year after year. It is such hotels as these that draw people from abroad to the island. The class who come here anyway are not the millionaires and other rich persons, but what is known as the "middle" class, neither rich nor poor, educated and intellectual people who go where they can find comfort without display, good but plain food, without robbery. You will never get the people who are ready to pay $25 a week or more for any accommodations they can get on the island. They can do much better elsewhere. We boast of a hotel in Vermont which sets a table that would delight an epicure, with beds of downy ease, immaculately clean and tidy in every room in the house, public or private. Half a dozen towels in each room and if one is taken down during the day and used no matter how little, it will be gone and a clean one in its place by a watchful maid in half an hour. Yet the price at this hotel is $17.50 per week, and upwards for larger rooms and suites. That is the kind of service tourists get there. This hotel, the Woodstock Inn at Woodstock, Vermont, a little village, is patronized by many leading Canadians. So much for hotels. The Islanders, as we all know, are conservative. But the limit of conservatism was surely reached when they took it into their heads to exclude automobiles from the island. That was something like trying to throw the calendar back, or like Mrs. Partington's attempt to sweep back the sea with a broom. The law has succeeded momentarily; but what of the future? Can any community in this day live to itself? No, it cannot. The island has so improved internal and external communication within 40 years that it is no longer isolated from the world. You are now a part of it and you will suffer unless you live as part of it. Why not prohibit the winter boats and the railroad? The latter scares horses--why not hurl a legislative fiat against it? No, you would not stop it if you could. So it would be with automobiles. I read the other day in a newspaper that:

The Islanders, as we all know, are conservative. But the limit of conservatism was surely reached when they took it into their heads to exclude automobiles from the island. That was something like trying to throw the calendar back, or like Mrs. Partington's attempt to sweep back the sea with a broom. The law has succeeded momentarily; but what of the future? Can any community in this day live to itself? No, it cannot. The island has so improved internal and external communication within 40 years that it is no longer isolated from the world. You are now a part of it and you will suffer unless you live as part of it. Why not prohibit the winter boats and the railroad? The latter scares horses--why not hurl a legislative fiat against it? No, you would not stop it if you could. So it would be with automobiles. I read the other day in a newspaper that:

"Mr. James Williams went over to New Glasgow, N. S., this morning and took with him probably the last of the automobiles in this Province, having purchased it from the local company upon whose hands it was. The hope of obtaining a repeal of the local Automobile Prohibition Act seems to have been abandoned for the present."

I cannot credit the last part of the item. I predict that automobiles will yet come by the scores to take the place of the machines that were once outlawed. The automobiles have come in the world to stay. They will be the carriages of the future. They have been opposed wherever there were horses, but no community of your size has outlawed them. The opposition is dying out everywhere else as fast as the horses get used to them. If the autos had been left alone most of the Island horses would now be educated to them. Those who oppose the use of autos are always the sufferers in the end. The auto would be of great service to the beach hotels here in carrying patrons from the railroad stations to the hotels; and even for that service they would be of large value to the island. The alarm about the autos was of the nature of an unreasoning panic. The machine was charged with causing accidents for which it was not responsible. The troubles with horses in our state now are very small and growing less. The insular position of the island makes it difficult for the farmer, the merchant and the manufacturer to reach the best market. It is hardly less than a crime to add to their difficulties by legislation which tends to make the island a hermit, like Corea. The island will eventually find the auto a great source of pleasure and of profit. The useful trolley which also scares horses--as once the bicycle scared them--will probably never reach the island. The auto will be an excellent substitute for regular service between cities, villages and hotels, and for hire. Dr. Webb's yacht from Vermont was at Charlottetown the other day. A number of the party wanted to hire an auto. When he found there was none on the island the party left in disgust.
