RAISING THE CALF

(By W. M. Lea.)

A short time ago an article appeared in the Guardian calling Farmers attention to the importance of raising all the live stock possible in view of the world wide shortage of and products of the dairy, as against the growing surplus of grain, and at present it looks like good business for Island Farmers to stock up to their full capacity.

Fear of being drawn into the war and losing their stock induced Danish farmers to part with a large number of their breeding animals and in measure accounts for the extraordinary price now being paid for pork, but whatever may be the cause the stock census of the world shows a steady decline in nearly all classes of live stock notably horned cattle.

Good beef cattle are worth upwards of eight cents live weight and fresh Jersey grade cows. The highest ever known in this province, $100 is readily obtainable for good ones in fact I cannot get them at any price to fill orders from abroad. At the present time and in view of a general scarcity and likelihood of high prices for sometime to come I think every good calf possible should be raised this spring. Don't mean by that to merely keep them living or at least not purposely destroy them, but to grow them for profit.

Under proper conditions a well fed calf will attain half its mature weight, at one year, three quarters at two years, and full growth the two following years. Considering the rapid increase in food consumed it is clearly evident that it pays to feed generously the first year.

I have had several males read 1,000 lbs. at one year that did not weigh much over a ton three years after, so we should aim to keep the calves growing rapidly, and while it is not a difficult matter to raise calves in proper care taken in their handling from the many poor little stunted wrecks of animals we meet in the country I take it that many people find it hard and costly enough, and for the benefit of those who may be having trouble I would suggest they try the following method. We remove the calf as quietly as possible, five or six hours old give it its first milk or teach it to drink. This is easily done if the calf is vigorous and hungry see that the dam's first milk is given and that it is warm in winter or a cold or frosty fall is used the milk should be warmed to food heat before feeding a young calf, in fact it is wiser to feed cold milk as it will cause scours almost as readily as an over feed.

We give a young calf a little less than it will take the first few days and then increase until it gets about all it can drink of whole milk twice a day for a week or two or until it is fleshing up. This will depend on its condition at birth. A fleshy strong calf will not require whole milk as long as a thin one, but in many cases don't wean until it is in good condition, then change slowly to skim milk, always seeing that the milk has not cooled any. Feed directly from the separator, and weigh the milk to each and every calf separately.

If there is any one thing that causes calves to go bad, take indigestion and scours, it is over feeding on skim milk. No one is expert enough to guess the quantity that is safe to feed and the only way to handle the milk is to weigh it, keep giving a little whole milk up to a month anyway and if your calf is from a good pure bred sire and worth raising well it will pay to give some whole milk longer even if it is only a pint it will help wonderfully and not cost as much as the many patented preparations that are sold as substitutes for whole milk.

We never give a calf anything to drink in its skim milk but teach it to eat some meal as soon as possible, bran crushed, oats and oil cake mixed dry and put in a box where the calf can reach it is the mixture we use as keep all the hay before it that it will eat, this ration a calf will grow just as fast as whole milk. It will not be so fat up to three or four months, but will be just as large and at less than half the cost. From that time we increase the feed rapidly. Many people do not realize how their appetite is growing at this age and fail to furnish roughage enough. Watching the calves closely and observing person will notice the first indication of scours and cut the milk ration down at once for a few feeds but if the case is well pronounced do not feed flour or other mixtures with the idea of checking the complaint as this only aggravates it. Give Castor Oil at once to remove the irritation that is causing the trouble, then after that operates bring the calf back slowly to its former feed.

I know of no greater leak on most farms than the feed wasted in trying to raise calves. After giving a calf two months milk to see it pine away, and waste all the feed of an entire summer just because someone was too careless to weigh its milk regularly is bad management, not bad luck as it is generally called. So get a scale, a spring balance is suitable. Every farmer should have it any way. I learn which cow's calf it will pay him best to raise, then weigh the calf's milk for the first three months of its life, and if you wish to make the most of it keep the skim milk up for another three months at least. Grow plenty of turnips. Nothing fits in with a six months calf so well if you cannot feed milk longer, and don't attempt to raise one more than you are certain in your circumstances you can develop properly. W. M. LEA.

MRS. MAY'S LETTER to WOMEN

More Proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Relieves Suffering.

Chicago, Ill.—"I suffered from a bad case of female ills. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and I took about six bottles. It fixed me up all right. The common symptoms of such a condition - pain when walking, irritation, bearing-down pains and backache, nervousness and disordered digestion - soon passed away. I look much better now than I did before, and I recommend the Compound every time for female troubles, as it did for me all it is claimed to do. You have my permission to publish this letter." Mrs. J. MAY, 3548 S. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill.

If you have any of the symptoms mentioned in Mrs. May's letter, remember what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for her, and try it yourself. It is a good old-fashioned medicine, made from roots and herbs, and it has helped countless numbers of women. If you need special advice, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.
