— SUCCESSFUL ISLANDER VISITS CHILDHOOD HOME —An interesting visitor to Prince Edward Island this week is Dr. Thomas Fulton Kinley of Rockford, Illinois, who is spending a few days visiting relatives and friends of his childhood at Cape Wolfe and West Point. He was accompanied by his wife and son, Delbert Kinley and Mrs. Delbert Kinley. They have been touring the principal places of interest in Canada and then came to the Island. It is 53 years since Dr. Kinley had seen his native province, having left Cape Wolfe when only twelve years of age, when his father, the late Samuel Kinley left for North Dakota, which at that time was an undeveloped state. As soon as he was old enough Dr. Kinley worked at anything he could find, as a rancher and other odd jobs. It was his ambition to become a doctor and first attended college at Winnipeg, and later went to Chicago, where he graduated in medicine from the University there. He became a successful physician and surgeon. He said on visiting the scenes of his childhood that there was nothing much left to remind him of his old home. The only thing that had remained unchanged was the road to the shore which he had often traversed as a boy. For the rest, none of the old land marks had remained. He was pleased with the many changes for the better which could be seen on every side as one drove by car from Borden. The paved roads are indeed a luxury. Before returning to their homes Dr. Kinley and his party will visit relatives in Halifax and Lunenburg. —S.

Lack of price Competition in Halifax, report

OTTAWA, Aug. 7—(CP)—The Wartime Prices and Trade Board in a statement tonight said lack of price competition was to blame for the high cost of food in Halifax and added "several measures are under consideration to offset the effect of this condition."

The board recently completed an investigation of retail and wholesale prices of food and retail prices of clothing in Halifax. This investigation consisted of a spot check on the prices and costs of a wide range of foods carried by about 90 grocery firms and of the prices of clothing and household dry goods. Similar checks were made in other cities to provide a basis for comparison.

The board statement said:

Meats sell in Halifax at about the same prices as in Ottawa, Montreal, and Toronto, with the usual variations among different stores. General groceries, however, are noticeably higher in price although costs to the retailers are only slightly higher, indicating that Halifax grocers take a substantially wider mark-up. These findings relate to average conditions, as some grocers in that city operate on narrow margins.

The average Halifax retail margin on eggs during the first six months of 1941 was 5 1-2 cents, the highest of 12 cities reporting. Moreover it has widened since the war began. There are great variations among the various retailers, some having margins as low as two cents and some as high as 12 and 13 cents per dozen.

The retail margin on butter in Halifax averaged about 4 1.2 cents per pound, the range being from two cents to eight cents per pound. Prices on the same brand of butter varied as much as five cents.

A few Halifax grocers were found to be charging nine cents a pound for sugar in two, five, and 10-pound lots, while the board considers that a maximum of 8 1.2 cents a pound gives a sufficient margin in the light of laid-down costs in Halifax.

All through the line of dry groceries margins were found to be so wide as to cause noticeably higher prices than in Ontario cities.
