SHE FLIES ACROSS TO RESCUE STYLES

NEW YORK, Dec. 27.—(CP)—Women are doing unusual things this Christmas season. Madame Elisabeth Schiaparelli, one-time leader of Paris designers, who has been lecturing in the United States, plans to pass up the cheer of an American Christmas, and fly across the Atlantic to carry out the toughest assignment she ever has had.

The colorful couturiere wants to do her bit in the struggle to keep Paris couture alive, by making a fashion collection for spring. To do this she and her seamstresses will have to work swiftly in the few mid-winter daylight hours, in a half-heated house, to concoct out of whatever materials they can find a collection of clothes which will meet practical wartime demands, provide substitutes for what is lacking, and still be chic.

The next collection from Paris will be the most interesting from a fashion-setting point of view that the couturiere ever has produced. She will keep the hair in order, yet look well morning, noon and night. She will have no taxis, she must make clothes suitable for subway wear, bicycling or walking. She must find waterproof materials. This will test her inventiveness and stimulate us to bring out something new and so different that in years to come the fashion world will turn to these collections as sinistors.

Island Woman Swims In Winter

THEY CLAIM WINTER DIPS IN THE OCEAN IS A SURE WAY TO KEEP FROM GETTING A COLD.

The Boston Post of the 2nd inst. contains an illustration of two women, one a native of Prince Edward Island, who are shown reposing in bathing attire on the snow-covered sands of Revere Beach. Under the picture it says: "Br-r-r to you, but it's just right for a dip," and goes on to say: "On the snow-covered stand at Revere Beach, yesterday, Mrs. Elizabeth Favier of 36 Perthshire road, Brighton, and Mrs. Florence Marchant of 53 Pearl Street, Newton, revealed the secret of how for five years they have been without a cold in the head, and from what penetrated through our extra thick carmine lips, as if they said that all that is necessary is an ice-cold bath or shower every morning and a dip in the ocean once a week through the year—including, and most important through the winter months.

"This is no feeble theory on the part of Mrs. Favier and Mrs. Marchant. They are in their fifth year of this rugged treatment for fighting off head colds, and even as they confided to what transports of blooming hardihood and health the winter surf-bathing had raised them, they were dashing in and out of an ocean that was raising goosebumps on Arctic whales.

"Away back in September, 1935, they resolved to take weekly dips at Revere Beach through the winter, and they have been going there every Sunday through the winter months since that time to do bathing suits and swim in the ocean.

"Mrs. Marchant, who is 65, has been a widow for seven years, and she has two sons, one 43 and the other 38, and two grandsons. When she started her weekly ocean dips five years ago she weighed 215 pounds, and now is down to 180 pounds. "After my husband's death I was extremely nervous," she said, "but the swimming, and the cold shower every morning soon cured that. And I haven't had a head cold in five years."

"Mrs. Favier is also a widow, takes an ice bath every morning at home. She was formerly a physical education and dancing teacher, but now is a food consultant. She hasn't consulted a physician in 20 years, and she has taken no hot baths for 15 years.

Blizzard comes With Christmas To Lonely Post

RESOLUTION ISLAND, N. W. T., Dec. 25.—(CP)—Christmas, on this barren outpost, came on the wings of a raging blizzard, but inside a lonely government radio station five bewildered Eskimo men joyfully celebrated the birth of Christ in the traditional manner.

Resolution Island, guardian of the eastern entrance to the Hudson Strait, was a gathering place today for eager natives, many of them coming from 250 miles away to join in the excitement and celebrate Christmas the white man's way.

Clad in furs and parkas, they travelled by dog-sled and on foot. For most of them it was their first chance to see their relatives since the weary winter months set in.

White men and natives feasted on Arctic game and traditional Eskimo fare, including a dimmed, squealing Eskimo children stuffed themselves with ice-cream and cakes while their elders played games.

At the other end of the Strait on Nottingham Island, the Holy Day was celebrated in much the same manner, according to cryptic wireless messages sent over the government communication system.

Centre of attraction at the radio post there was a hand-made Christmas tree, laden with improvised ornaments and hand-made gifts. A real Christmas tree just can't be found in the ice-hummocks and wind-swept valleys of Nottingham Island.

The Eskimos gathered around the sending apparatus to transmit messages to their friends and relatives at other posts including Resolution Island and Cape Permyne in the western Arctic.

The latter point, larger than either Nottingham Island Station or the post on Resolution, was visited during the first week by an airplane-riding Santa Claus who brought turkeys, mail and gifts from the "outside."
