WOMAN'S WORK NEVER DONE.

A home is a day and a night institution every day of the year, and the talk of putting housework on an eight-hour basis is nonsense. Were it done, there would need to be a lot of work overtime. Justice Guy, of New York, in addressing a local suffrage meeting, declared that an eight-hour day for housewives would be the beginning of putting the household on a business basis, and expressed the opinion that women were as good business managers as men. There should be business methods for employment, in this respect. Business methods are particularly needed in the home without servants, where all the work must be done by the mother, with the help of the children. The hard work of a household might be compressed into various periods not covering altogether more than eight hours, but from breakfast to bed time, in the home where there are children, there are dozens of little duties that cannot be crowded into an eight-hour schedule. "A man's work is from sun to sun, but a woman's work is never done," ran the old adage. The modern workman may be able to say that his work is from 8 till 5 with an hour's rest at noon, but it takes for most a stretch of the imagination to see the time when the work of the housewife and mother will be placed upon the time-clock basis.—Frances Frear in "Leslie's."

TALES TOLD BY MEN IN THE FIGHTING LINE

NOTRE DAME DE LORETTE.

A French officer describes the following, the taking of Notre Dame de Lorette in which he took part.
"On Saturday, May 8, at 7 o'clock in the morning we set out from Hersin. For two days we had known that our battalion and the Chasseurs were ordered to assault the famous plateau of Notre Dame de Lorette, and a sudden delirium took possession of every man among us. At last we were going to rise from our torpor.
"We were happy and light hearted when we left Hersin. When we arrived at Bouvigny we left our haversacks in the woods, and the commandant assembled us and sketched out our task.

"Your Duty, My Children!"
"There were no superfluous words. "Do your duty, my children. The job is a hard one, but we have got to take the plateau. We shall take it."
"At 1 o'clock in the morning we reached the trenches facing the Boche by way of tunnels, and while waiting for the ball to begin, we lay down, but not to sleep.
"At 6 o'clock a well known sound came rushing overhead; it was the ranging fire of our artillery. Our nerves were on edge.

"Then at eight o'clock, as though at the turn of a magic ring, the attack burst forth in all its fury. Heavy guns, mountain guns, the savage barking of the 75's air bombs—everything at once. The earth veritably trembled on the plateau. One might have believed it was a cataclysm.
"By the time the bursting shells and strident whistling of the shells, we were standing with fixed bayonets, waiting and breathing hard until the storm should cease for our part of the business to be played.
"Our Turn at Last.

"For two hours it was a tempest of fire against the Prussian positions, and at last, at ten o'clock, it was our turn.
"We took the first trench with a single bound. Reaching the second line and finding nobody there, we rushed on to the third.
"Earthed up like foxes, the Prussians were all there. 'Kamarades, Kamarades,' they called to us, and at the same time fired with their revolvers at us at point blank range. We spit them on our bayonets.
"Other companies arrived behind us to clean up the captured trenches and make prisoners, and then a handful of us remained to the assault of the fourth line of defence. This was soon abandoned by the enemy, and fell into our hands.

"We were only about thirty 'pollus' who had escaped the fire of the machine guns. We gazed at one another, but not for long. Suddenly from the flanks and the front, the Boches furiously counter-attacked. Without a word each one of us took his place on the parapet and opened a deadly fire on the enemy.

"Hurricane of Steel.
"A hurricane of steel passed over and over us without moving, and, knowing the importance attached to our corner, we held on grimly, and at last the Boches retreated, leaving many dead on the field. Sixteen only of us were now left.

"During the next two days we were desperately counter-attacked, but each of us was imbued with the will to win. Everyone of us had, without bragging, determined to sacrifice his life.
"From our advanced post we saw the battle progressing in the plain. What a fantastic night, what unforgettable hours we passed there on the conquered tableland, with its view of the plains of Leng as far as the eye could reach. The soldiers were happy. "I was wounded at one o'clock on the morning of May 11 and it was with a heavy heart that I left my comrades of whom I had taken command.

"It was painful for me to leave this dearly won corner before the complete rout of the enemy, especially as I had so many dead comrades to avenge. But now, Notre Dame de Lorette is ours and the long nightmare of this winter campaign has vanished.

CHEST PROTECTORS.

The following is an extract from a letter from one just landed in England who has been in all these last months in Germany:

"We all feel quite happy to be where one can see as much white bread as one wishes. In Germany each person is only allowed a bit more than half a pound a day of the blackest kind of rye-potato bread. The Germans are very keen on putting everything to some use for the war, so they have bought up lots of cats. These cats wear collars with "K.K.K." printed on them (Kaiserlich Koeniglich Katze—Imperial Royal Cats). They are kept in the grain warehouses to ward off mice. By Government order, all other cats are to be killed, and their skins used for making chest protectors for the soldiers. So much is demanded of peaceful pussies.
"The hatred against England is indescribable. They give afternoon teas where the women knit for the soldiers, and everyone who does not say "Gott-straefe England" instead of "Good-day" and "Good-bye" has to pay a fine. I asked a friend in the German army whether they intend to keep Belgium, and he was quite indignant that I ever asked such a question. "Of course," he replied, "and also Calais when we take it," and then he added, "We also expect to take and hold a bit along the coast of England."

NOT A "PROPER SCRAP."

A private writes of the rising in Nyassaland:

"I confirm my last letter to you of January 31, telling you that I was going out after rebels here. Since then I have been in service in the Manje district and on the Portuguese border between Lake Shirwa and Manje Mountain.
"There were two pitched scraps between the Volunteers and the Regular black troops and the rebels, in the first of which our people had to retire, and things looked serious. But next day they advanced again, totally routed the rebels and blew up their stronghold. Since then they have absolutely scattered, and had no fight left in them. I went out from Manje Moma to join a man called Williams, and we were out alone on the Portuguese border with sixty armed natives and a varying number of loyal spearmen. Several of our spearmen were ambushed one night on the frontier and three killed, so I was detached with thirty rifles and thirty spearmen to sweep along the border and decapitate and capture any rebels I could find. None stood to give battle, and nobody fired on me, but my spearmen bagged a few who would not halt when challenged, and the riflemen sniped after fugitives.
"Other columns have been operating throughout the disaffected country, and the rebels are nearly all dead, wounded or captured, and so farried that I reckon it is all over and they are heartily sick of their folly. We had no sheds, tents, chairs, cooking utensils, cook or proper food, and lived on what we could requisition from the villages, so you can guess that we had a rough time, particularly as it rained nearly every day or night, and the country was all mud and water. Still I enjoyed it awfully, and would not have missed it for anything; my only regret was that none would stand and give us a proper scrap.
"I took no rifle, but only my revolver, as I reckoned it was better for the kind of work. This will just give you an idea of what happened.

REGULAR FLOW OF GERMAN PRISONERS.

We came back for a short rest after the battle of Neuve Chapelle (writes a captain in an Indian regiment). It was a great show to have been in, as it was really our first advance since last October, and as such will go down to history. Also we used the biggest mass of artillery on the smallest front in any war. . . . I think the worst time we had was the morning of the 12th when the Germans shelled us for seven hours without stopping. We had nearly 70 cas-

How sleep the brave who sink to rest
By all their country's wishes blest!
When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
Returns to deck their hallow'd mould,
Shere shall dress a sweeter sod
Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.
By fairy hands their knell is rung,
By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
There Honour comes, a pilgrim gray,
To bless the turf that wraps their clay;
And Freedom shall a while repair,
To dwell a weeping hermit there.
