With shame I write the following passages. Would I could blot them out of my life. To this day there must be many who remember my meteoric career in the firmament of fast life. It didn't last long, but in less than a week I managed to squander a small fortune.

I drink and I drink. It seems to me I am always drinking. Rarely do I eat. I am one of half a dozen spectacular "live ones." All the camp is talking of us, but it seems to me I lead the bunch in the race to ruin. I wonder what Berna thinks of it all. Was there ever such a sensitive creature? Where did she get that obstinate pride? Remonstrantly the Prodigal speeds to town.

er see her, but amid all the saturnalism she haunts me. The thought of her is agony. I know she watches me. If she would only stoop and save me now! I must go deeper yet. Faster and faster must I swirl into the vortex.

In all that fierce madness of debauch, thank God, I retained my honor. They beguiled me, they tried to lure me into their rooms; but at the moment I went to enter I recoiled. It was as if an invisible arm stretched across the doorway and barred me out.

And Blossom, she, too, tried so hard to lure me, and because I resisted it inflamed her. She would coax me with the prettiest gestures and cajole me with the sweetest endearments; then, when I steadfastly resisted her, she would fly into a fury and flout me with the foulness of the stew.

It was in one of the corridors of the dance hall in the early hours of the morning. The place was deserted, strewn with debris of the night debauch. We were up there, Blossom and I. I was in a strange state of mind, a state bordering on frenzy. No longer, I felt, could I keep up this pace. Something had to happen, and that soon.

She put her arms around me. "Come," she said.

She led me toward her room. No longer was I able to resist. My foot was on the threshold and I was almost over when—

"Telegram, sir."

It was a messenger. Confusedly I took the flimsy envelope and tore it open. Blantly I stared at the line of type. I stared like a new man in a dream. I was sober enough now.

"Ain't you coming?" said Blossom, putting her arms round me.

"No," I said hoarsely, "leave me, please leave me. Oh, my God!"

Her face changed, became vindictive, the face of a fury.

"Curse you!" she hissed. "Oh, I knew. It's that other, that white-faced doll you care for. Look at me! Am I not better than her? And you scorn me. Oh, I hate you. I'll get even with you and her. Curse you, curse you—"

She snatched up an empty wine bottle. Swinging it by the neck she struck me square on the forehead. I felt the stunning blow, a warm rush of blood. Then I fell forward, and the lights seemed to go out.

"There I lay in a heap, and the blood spouting from my wound soaked the little piece of paper. On it was written:

"Mother died this morning, Garry."

"Where am I?"

"Here with me."

Low and sweet and tender was the voice. I was in bed and my head was heavily bandaged, so that the cloths weighed upon my eyelids. By my bedside some one was sitting, and a soft, gentle hand was holding mine.

"It that you, Berna?"

"Yes, please don't talk."

I thrilled with a sudden sweetness of joy. Flood of sunshine bathed me. It was all over, then the turmoil, the storm, the shipwreck. I was drifting on a tranquil ocean of content. Blissfully I closed my eyes.

Yet there was something, some memory draker than the others, some shadow of shadows that baffled me. As I battled with the growing terror and suspense, it all came back to me, the telegram, the news my collapse, and in my agony I spoke to the girl.

"Berna, tell me, is it true? Is my mother dead?"

"It is true, dear. You must try to bear it bravely."

I could feel her bending over me, could feel her hand holding mine, could feel her hair brush my cheeks, yet I forgot even her just then. I thought only of mother, of her de-

The teacher had been explaining the different meaning of the words "two," "two," and "two," and, finally, to find out if the children had grasped the idea, she decided to give a test.

"Now, children, as quickly as you can, I want you to give me a sentence containing all three spellings."

She had scarcely finished speaking when up went a hand.

"Well, Isaac?" said the teacher, and the boy, the only Jewish child in the class, answered, glibly: "Two shillings is too much to spend."

rowdy men and ribald women. I am at the zenith of my shame. Right and left I am buying wine. How I loathe myself but I think of Berna, and the thought goads me to fresh excesses. I will go on till flesh and blood can stand it no longer, till I drop in my tracks. I realize that somehow I must make her pity me, must awake in her that guardian angel which exists in every woman. Only in that way can I break down the barrier of her pride and arouse the love latent in her heart.

Always amid that lurid carnival of sin floats the figure of Blossom, Blossom with her child-face of dazzling fairness, her china-blue eyes, her round, smooth cheeks. How different from the pinched pallid face of Berna! Poor poor Berna! I never vation and of how little I had done to deserve it. So this was the end; a narrow grave, a rending grief and the haunting specter of reproach.

My sobs were choking me, and Berna was holding my hand very tightly. Yet in a little I grew calmer.

"Berna," I said, "I've only got you now, only you, little girl. So you must love me, you mustn't leave me."

"I'll never leave you—if you want me to stay."

"God bless you, dear. I can't tell you the comfort you are to me. I'll try to be quiet now."

I will always remember those days as I grew slowly well again. Berna left me much alone, alone with my thoughts. Often when all was quiet I knew she was sitting thinking, thinking, just as I was there beyond the curtain, sitting thinking. Quiet was the keynote of our life, quiet and sunshine. That little cabin might have been a hundred miles from the gold-born city, it was so quiet. How sweet she looked in her spotless home attire, her neat waist, her white apron with bib and sleeves, her general air of a little housewife. And never was there so devoted a nurse.

ENTRUSED

LONDON, Nov. 26—Rig. Hon. Richard B. Bennett, the Canadian Premier, who arrived in London Friday, was in such a festive mood when he learned of the 50 per cent. tariffs, from which all Dominion goods are exempt, that he went right out and bought a new hat. It was English-made. For Mr. Bennett that is regarded by British politicians as a great concession to the industries of the Mother Country.

But what is one hat against all the typewriters and other things that Canada is now expecting to ship to Great Britain duty free while the United States' goods are being kept out by a 50 per cent tariff?

"Can you give any well-known date in Roman history?"

"I can, teacher," said one pupil. "Antony's with Cleopatra."
