Y.M.C.A. NOTES FOR THE WEEK

The recently organized Crescent Club of Intermediate Boys held its first supper rally on Friday. Ray Hennessy, President, was chairman for the occasion. Members of the club and guests occupied 26 places at the supper tables, which were served by Mrs. A. M. Douglas, Mrs. W. R. LePage, Mrs. E. V. Bell and Mrs. Geo. Craig, all members of the Y's Menettes. Dr. V. L. Goodwill, chairman of the Boys' Work Committee of the Board of Directors, gave an address indicating the value of Y. M. C. A. training and pointing out several qualities of character necessary to a boy's development into the best type of manhood. Harry Lewis and Ray Hennessy contributed the musical programme and contests were directed by Bill Johnston. W. A. Henry, Physical Director, spoke briefly on the gymnasium programme and Mr. E. V. Bell, Honorary President brought words of encouragement to the club.

The Association was pleased to welcome the Young People's Society of Trinity Church to the building on Friday. A recreation period on the bowling alleys, followed the study classes held in the church earlier in the evening.

On Thursday afternoon, the first regular meeting of the Y's Menettes was held with a large number of the members present. Mrs. A. M. Douglas, President of the Club, presided and plans for service to the Association in the immediate future were agreed upon. A social half hour and the serving of tea followed the business meeting.

The regular weekly meeting of the Hi-Y Grads was held Wednesday night with a good attendance. The session was for the transaction of business. The monthly supper meeting of the club will be held on Wednesday.

The recently re-finished Reading Room of the Association is growing in popularity daily. The fine assortment of periodicals and warm, cheery atmosphere of the room are attracting boys and young men increasingly.

The Y's Men's Club held its weekly supper meeting on Thursday. Matters of business occupied the attention of the club throughout its session. J. M. McFadyen was appointed Chairman of the Christmas Cheer Committee and Jack McNair and a Committee were appointed to take charge of a Rummage Sale in the Association building on the 15th of the month.

The week has been marked by lots of activity in the bowling alleys. The teams from the Rebekahs had keen competition on Monday night, the Pals defeating the Nomads by 96 pins and the Sports winning over the Aces by the narrow margin of 21 pins. Canadian National Hotel defeated the Guardian in the Commercial League on Tuesday while the Maritime Electric were also victorious in a close contest with Island Telephone. In the Y's Men's League, Has Beens defeated Lucky Sevens and Tigers nosed out the champs by only 47 pins. The City League events for the week score the honours for Prince Grocery against Y. M. C. A. and for the Veterans against the Y's Men's Club. Games in the Church League on Friday gave the Baptist team a win over Trinity and St. Paul's won from Zion.

HALIFAX, Dec. 8.—(CP)—"There are a great many Canadians who hope that their country will remain neutral in the event of another war," Prof. T. W. L. MacDermot of McGill University, National Secretary of the League of Nations in Canada, stated in a public address here.

And the only way war could be avoided, the University professor said, was by making the League of Nations a world parliament, law court, civil service, labor office and constitution. The League's work for co-operation between nations enabled it to arbitrate quarrels instead of having nations concerned go to war.

"When nations have failed to co-operate, to be open and honest in their dealings with each other; when they have broken the pledges which the League imposed upon them, then the League has failed—and war has come nearer and armament grown greater," he declared.

HEALTH by Dr. [illegible]

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

IN RETREAT

At the opening of this century, the greatest and most outstanding disease enemy of mankind was tuberculosis. Today, tuberculosis is in retreat, but not defeated. It is for us to determine how rapidly the retreat is to be pressed and the enemy annihilated.

Those who bewail the evils of the present day would be well advised to give some attention to its achievements. The yesterdays were, in some ways, more attractive and picturesque, but they were nothing nearly so comfortable or as safe as the today in which we live.

Most diseases which have been conquered were overcome by means of the discovery of some specific means for their prevention or through the development of a method to prevent their spread. Diphtheria is vanquished by diphtheria immunization, and typhoid fever disappears when water and milk supplies are made safe.

It is remarkable, but none the less true, that tuberculosis is in retreat despite the fact that no specific means for the prevention or cure of the disease has been discovered. Tuberculosis is in retreat because the people have learned about this particular enemy, and they are fighting it with intelligence based upon their understanding.

What do we know about tuberculosis? We know that every case comes from some previous one. Turn this idea around, and you will see that just as soon as those who now have the disease stop passing it on to others, then tuberculosis will come to an end.

There is so much less tuberculosis today chiefly because patients have learned in sanatoria, the public have read it in newspapers and have heard it in lectures, that tuberculosis is spread from one person to another in the germ-laden sputum of the tuberculous. Just so far as we have gone in stopping the transfer of sputum, to that extent have we pressed upon the retreating enemy.

It is so much more easy to fight an enemy you know than one you do not know. Those who know that they have tuberculosis are not our enemies, because knowing that they have the disease, they can take precautions to protect the people with whom they come in contact. The real enemy is the tuberculosis patent who, because he does not know that he has the disease, is spreading the germs of tuberculosis in his sputum. These unsuspected cases must be revealed, through organized efforts at case-finding if we are to defeat the enemy that is Tuberculosis.

Questions concerning Health, addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College Street, Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

Canada At War 20 Years Ago

(Prepared for the Canadian Press By Captain W. W. Murray, M. C.) (Copyright, 1934, by the Canadian Press)

Twenty years ago tomorrow the Battle of the Falkland Islands was fought—a naval engagement which, battled to a finish in the dismal wastes of the South Atlantic, cleared from the face of the seven seas the last vestige of Germany's maritime power.

A consequence of more than equal importance was the restoration to the British peoples of their faith in the Royal Navy; for their confidence had been rudely disturbed five weeks previously when, at Coronel off the Chilean coast, the German Pacific squadron of Admiral von Spee had destroyed the squadron of Rear-Admiral Sir Christopher Cradock, sinking the cruisers Good Hope and Monmouth with the loss of close to 1,500 men.

The news of Cradock's defeat had awakened the British admiralty to the necessity of dealing decisively with von Spee. One of the earliest acts of Lord Fisher, who had succeeded Prince Louis of Battenberg as First Sea Lord, was to despatch Rear-Admiral Sir Frederick Doveton Sturdee, chief of the admiralty war staff, to the South Atlantic with a formidable squadron. The two first battle-cruisers built by Britain, Inflexible and Invincible, were withdrawn from the Grand Fleet, overhauled at Devonport and sent, under Sturdee's command to a secret rendezvous—Abrohols Rock—off the coast of Brazil.

There Sturdee's squadron was completed, and when he steamed southward to the Falkland Islands he had under his command, in addition to the two battle-cruisers already mentioned, three armored cruisers, Carnarvon, Kent and Cornwall, and the light cruisers Bristol and Glasgow. The last-named vessel had taken part in the Battle of Coronel, but succeeded in escaping the fate of the Good Hope and the Monmouth.

The Admiralty anticipated that von Spee would enter the Atlantic either to continue his career of commerce-raiding or, crossing to South Africa, operate against the South African troops then engaged in their conquest of German South-West Africa. In one particular the Admiralty's assessment of the German admiral's intentions was correct.

A wireless message to H. M. S. Canopus, which had taken no part in the Coronel battle, being too slow to accompany Cradock, ordered this vessel to Port Stanley in the Falkland Islands,, where she was informed, she would be safe sonce the "new guns for the forts had already arrived." This message was intercepted by von Spee, as the Admiralty hoped and, as the Admiralty had further hoped, the German commander interpreted it as a ruse to keep him away from the Falklands. He fell into the trap and, leaving the island of Juan Fernandez on Nov. 15, he set his course southward and through the Straits of Magellan to Port Stanley.

British Fleet Arrives

Sturdee's fleet arrived at the Falklands on the morning of Dec. 7 and proceeded to coal. Canopus, Glasgow and Bristol were in the inner harbor, with Invincible, Inflexible, Carnarvon, Kent and Cornwall in the outer.

On the morning of Dec. 8 the watchers on Signal Hill reported the approach of von Spee's fleet. The German sent a light vessel ahead to scout, and this ship reported having noted the presence of two British ships in Port Stanley. At once von Spee gave orgers to prepare for battle, expecting to find only the remnants of Cradock's defeated fleet.

The Germans advanced in line, the Gneisnau leading, followed by the Nurnberg, the Scharnhorst, the Dredsen and the Leipzig. Meanwhile the British coaling operations were almost finished; orders had been issued to raise steam for full speed. About 9:30 a. m. von Spee came abreast of the harbor mouth and beheld, to his horror, not Cradock's "derelicts" but a British squadron vastly superior in every respect to his own. The German at once turned away to the eastward, and after him steamed Sturdee's fleet.

First out was the Kent, followed by the Glasgow, then the Carnarvon, the battle-cruisers and the Cornwall. At 10 o'clock the two forces were some 12 miles apart.

It was a clear fresh day, with a bright sun and light north-west breezes inclinable to calm. A stern chase ensued with Sturdee slackening the speed of Inflexible and Invincible to 20 knots to allow the cruisers to keep up. At that, however, the British had the measure of the Germans, whose vessels were befouled after months of cruising.

Appreciating that his own position was hopeless, von Spee divided his forces. The Gneisenau and the Scharnhorst continued due east; the Nurnberg, Dredsen and Leipzig steered south-east. Three British warships, the Invincible, Inflexible, Carnarvon, pursued the two large enemy ships while Kent, Glasgow and Cornwall chased the lighter vessels. The engagement thus fell into two phases.

Battle Begins

At two o'clock, the British battle-cruisers had the range of the Germans and a terrific artillery duel began. Their superior speed and heavier armament enabled the British to pound the Germans. After two hours of intense accurate gunnery the British saw the Scharnhorst, a mass of flames, list to the port and then turn bottom upwards her propellor still going round. Scarcely touched by the enemy's fruitless reply, the British concentrated on the Gneisenau. A 5 o'clock in the evening she also listed and went down, her colors flying.

Meanwhile the British light cruisers were more equally matched in their own special action. But the first of the Germans, the Nurnberg, was sunk by the Kent at 7:27 p. m. For an hour and a half the Leipzig kept up a battle against the Cornwall and the Glasgow until she also heeled over and sank. The Dredsen, a speedier ship than her British opponents, managed to escape. (The Dresden re-entering the Pacific was sunk three months later by the Kent and Glasgow off Juan Fernandez).

"Let us do honor to a gallant enemy," writes a naval historian. "The German admiral fought as Cradock had fought, the German soldiers died as Cradock's men had died, and there can be no higher praise. They went down with colors flying, and at the last the men seemed to have lined up on the decks of doomed ships. They continued to resist after their vessels had become shambles...Von Spee and Cradock lie beneath the same waters, in the final concord of those who have looked unshaken upon death."

EXPLORER MEDAL AWARDED WOMAN

LONDON, Dec., 8.—(By The Canadian Press)—The Burton Memorial Medal, awarded triennially by the Royal Asiatic Society for the most outstanding achievement in the field of exploration and travel in Asia, was presented to Miss Freya Stark at a meeting of the society in London. Lord Lloyd made the presentation.

Miss Stark is the first woman to be awarded the medal. It was conferred on her in recognition of her journeys of exploration in Persia. Last year she was honored by the Royal Geographical Society for her pioneer visit to Persia—during which she discovered a stronghold of the ancient secret society of the Assassins, a Mohammedan sect. She confirmed the tales of murder by the Assassins' rulers which the Crusaders brought back with them. The sect gave the word "assassin" to the English language.
