WESTERN FILM WILL PLEASE ACTION FANS

For a western picture that has just about everything the average action fan could desire, place "Code of the Outlaw," which opens tonight at the Empire Theatre for a three day run, right on top. Not only is it the best in the Three Mesquiteer series Republic has produced to date, but one of the most thoroughly enjoyable films of any type shown here in months.

Tom Tyler, Bob Steele and Rufe Davis as the Mesquiteers are called in by a mining town's authorities to uncover $98,000 which has been stolen from a prominent citizen. The bandit chieftain has been killed and the only key to the mystery of where the money has been hidden is his young son, a vicious, hot-tempered little outlaw.

The Mesquiteers have the boy placed in their custody and begin to thraw him out by good treatment. But just as he is about to make a confession, he is kidnapped by a renegade member of the bandit gang who wants the money for himself. The Mesquiteers go to the rescue, and in the ensuing furiously paced action contribute their part in saving the boy and preventing the money from falling into the renegade's possession.

Mystery Mariner is Dramatized

One of the most colorful characters in San Francisco waterfront history is brought to life on the screen in Raymond Walburn's portrayal of the yarn-spinning "Admiral" in Universal's graphic film, "San Francisco Docks."

Coming today to the Capitol Theatre with Burgess Meredith, Irene Hervey, Barry Fitzgerald, Robert Armstrong and Lewis Howard, the picture presents Walburn as an eccentric old salt whose stories of high adventure at sea are wrought from pure imagination.

"The character was called the 'Oldtimer,' although no one knew his real name," Walburn explains. "I became acquainted with him when I was just starting out as a young actor. For years I've wanted to re-create his personality on the screen, but this is my first opportunity."
