Alberton

Mrs. J. S. Taylor and little son, who have been visiting in Charlottetown have returned home to Alberton.

Mr. Jack Christopher of Tignish was in Alberton last week on business.

The Young Peoples Society of the United Church at Alberton are planning on taking advantage of the good roads and nice moonlight nights in the way of a good sleigh drive. They intend to drive up to Montrose hall where they will meet some of the Montrose young people and join in good merry times of games. Refreshments will be served.

Horsemen in Alberton and vicinity are training their race horses prior to the big race on the Montrose River.

The Trail Rangers Concert in the Institute Hall at Alberton went over big. The boys and their leader were well repaid for their efforts by the large attendance, and the proceeds from admission and sale of candy, Mayor E. O. Barbour acted as chairman and opened with a short talk, giving the boys great encouragement in their efforts. Rev. Dr. Ross then described a piano solo which was capably given by Miss Elizabeth Ross. The boys followed on with their program: Dialogue, Empty House, song by six boys, Home on the Range, Reading by Mrs. A. C. Green. Song by boys, The Dear Old Southern Home. Recitation by Henry Clark. Last number, dialogue, Josiah's Proposal, which was much enjoyed by all the singing of the National Anthem brought the enjoyable concert to a close. Credit is due to Mr. Herbert Matthews for the success of the concert.—A

Liberal Leader's Insincerity Seen From Past Record

Signs were not lacking that this was already coming about. Mr. King had inserted a remark to the effect he might support them in a speech on disarmament.

King's Misstatement Corrected
Mr. King was doing the country a "wrong" when he said there were 1,000,000 unemployed, the Prime Minister said. There were 1,000,000 people receiving relief but these included men, women, children, even babies, all persons dependent on relief. The figure included also the farmers in the drought areas of western Canada who received relief. Many thousands of these people could not be classed as unemployed as they were never wage-earners.

No accurate estimate of the number of unemployed could be made but the best information available made it conclusively appear that it was less than 500,000. One statistical report stated the number of unemployed had been reduced from 750,000 at the worst of the depression to about 400,000 now.

"I submit that it is something of which the candid people might well be proud," said Mr. Bennett after reading the decrease in unemployment figures. "Why should Liberal members go around and try to create the impression the number unemployed was greater than it is?"

Injuring Canada
He would think those who sought office, continued the Prime Minister, would guard against blackening the reputation of this country in the eyes of the world. Why had the Liberals frankly told the nations of the world there had been a decrease in the unemployed from 750,000 to 400,000?

The Opposition had selected every opportunity to cause injury to the country, proceeded the Premier. "Why blacken Canadian industry?" he asked. "Why blacken the reputation of this country? This Dominion was one of the brightest spots of world nations in economic conditions. It was a continued and steady advance in the way of 'wall and wall' about conditions. 'In the country the Liberal party has used every means in its power to attack the leader of this government,' he continued. "What for?" "To win elections," interjected a Liberal member.

"That's the reason," returned the Premier. "Liberal jeers and Conservative lies."

Mr. King had talked of chivalry. The Opposition leader was unknown to the Liberal leader "except for the purposes of advancing his political fortunes," said Mr. Bennett. "The Opposition leader had talked of respect having been shown to the Crown in respect to the speech of the Opposition leader as to what would be done in the Speech from the Throne. If the Opposition leader wants to lecture on that point I suggest that he go to Queen's Park, Toronto, and address his lieutenant," proceeded the Premier.

Probes Mr. King's Record
He would remind Mr. King also of the 1926 general election, said Mr. Bennett. In that election, Mr. King had raised the cry that Downing Street should be visited by Canada. But in June of 1926, Mr. King had written to Lord Byng, then Governor General, suggesting the British Secretary for the Dominions should be consulted regarding the circumstances of Mr. King's resignation as Prime Minister.

"By one single wave of the hand" proceeded the Premier, "the leader of the Opposition of today could have stopped the taxation that was aroused." All Mr. King had to do was to tell the people in the 1926 election that the (Mr. King) had suggested to Lord Byng by letter that Downing Street should be consulted, said Mr. Bennett. He maintained that Gladstone had discussed subjects which were shortly afterwards contained in a Speech from the Throne read in the British Parliament.

The purpose of his broadcasts was to enable the people to become informed so that they could communicate their stand to their members before the latter came to Ottawa, Mr. Bennett said. "And I am delighted and honored to be able to say that the Conservative party is true to its old traditions, is prepared to carry forward the reform measures laid down in the Speech from the Throne.

Society Limited
"It is true," Mr. Bennett continued, "that they expect opposition as usual." He referred to Mr. Mackenzie King's offer to co-operate on the reform measures. But the offer had been surrounded by conditions and limitations.

Taking up the references made by Mr. King yesterday to his use of the term "my government," Mr. Bennett declared that such phraseology had been common for 200 years. It had been used in Canada by every Prime Minister and would be so used again undoubtedly. The present Opposition leader himself had used the term.

ENO'S "FRUIT SALT"
Clears intestines... Sweetens the Stomach... Tones up whole system

"I fancy there will not be the same opposition to the Marketing Act now as there was a while ago," Mr. Bennett said, "because it has succeeded and is performing the functions for which it was created."

Mr. King & St. James St.
He had not expected to hear the opposition leader mention the central bank said Mr. Bennett, when he remembered the attempt Mr. King had made to "stand on all sides of the question" during the debate on the bill last session. Finding that he could not "straddle the fence" Mr. King had voted "as St. James Street dictated," Mr. Bennett declared. The only criticism he had heard was that the government retained too much control of the Central Bank, he said.

Replying to suggestions that his reform programme indicated a change of heart, Mr. Bennett said that as early as 1932, before the Imperial Conference, he had told his associates that if the conference failed the government would have to institute reform measures in Canada.

Mr. Bennett's Inspiration
The suggestions that he had secured his inspiration from Mr. King's volume of Humanity in Industry, Mr. Bennett said he got his inspiration from the lives of great reformers—"not reformers who put their ideas in books but who put them on the statute books through Parliament."

"Fine-spun theories in books will not accomplish reform in these days of realism and actuality," Mr. Bennett added. "We will go forward to the end that this country shall be purged of the evils it has mentioned. We will use every means in our power to bring about measures to overcome inequalities. I am satisfied the good sense and judgment of the people will give us warm support."

C. C. F. LEADER
When Mr. Bennett sat down amid applause from his followers, J. S. Woodsworth, leader of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, began.

Mr. Woodsworth declared his task and that of his group was easier now that both the old parties had seen the light on the question of reform. He congratulated the government on the Speech from the Throne "whatever its motives," because it contained more than any other speech since he had been a member of the House.

The question Mr. Bennett had to answer was why he had left his reform policy under the eye of an election. In his opinion Mr. Bennett's explanation was not convincing.

He also thought reform of the capitalist system would never solve any problem. At the most it would bring Canada up to the position of other civilized countries—of England under the Lloyd George regime and Germany after the war. Mr. Bennett had however made a great contribution to political discussion, when he declared the capitalist system must be considered on its merits and when he declared for regulation of industry.

It would be unfair for the government to introduce legislation along the lines of social reform unless it had established its constitutionally or provided some means of testing it, said Mr. Woodsworth. He hoped the government had done this and that if the bills went through this session there would be no chance of their being upset by the courts. He also hoped they would go through.

WNI Stabilize System
The weakness of Mr. Bennett's policy in the C. O. F. leader's opinion was that it would stabilize the present capitalist system. Mr. Bennett had divided the people into producers and non-producers. He had offered no suggestion of an investigation of some of the large fortunes of Canada, which certainly had "not been earned by the sweat of the brow."

There was also the question of inherited wealth. Mr. Woodsworth declared the right of inheriting great wealth meant that one man's children had a claim on the services of another man's children because they were born. He believed that apart from the provision of small allowances for living descendants no right of inheritance should exist.

The Bennett policy, he declared would stabilize class society and would stabilize class society, and another which lived by taxation.

With the proposals for minimum wages and maximum working hours, unemployment insurance, revised old age pensions and health insurance he was in full accord. It should be remembered however, that unemployment insurance would not help those who were now unemployed or on low wages. They could not contribute to any insurance reserve.

There was also the question of financing the proposed reforms. Mr. Woodsworth did not see how this could be accomplished under the present system. The people could not stand higher taxes and he did not believe business interests could stand higher taxes. This was one of the defects of the capitalist system. By the accumulation of debt it was made impossible to effect the reforms needed and still preserve the system.

Neither the government nor the official opposition, said Mr. Woodsworth, seemed to realize that the situation of an ever-expanding world trade was gone forever. Both seemed to look for increasing world trade as a sure means of bringing back prosperity.

Says System Doomed
Great as was Mr. Bennett's knowledge, Mr. Woodsworth said he was still convinced the Prime Minister did not realize the present capitalist economic system was doomed.

It was Hon. Mackenzie King then sought to read the whole of the letter he had written to Lord Byng, Governor-General in 1926 and from which Mr. Bennett had quoted a part. Speaker Bowman ruled against him.

John Hackett (Cons. Stanstead) said the Farm Loan Board had not operated to the benefit of the people of Quebec. It had "without purpose, without point and gives no aid to the necessities of agriculture."

When the Quebec Conservative finished his brief speech, Liberals yelled for the vote but Alfred Speakman, United Farm member for Red Deer took the floor and will speak at 8 o'clock.

Defends Marketing Act
OTTAWA, Jan. 22—Alfred Speakman, U. F. A. Red Deer, continued the address debate in the House of Commons tonight. He confined his speech to a general defence of the Marketing Act passed last year and its effect on primary producers.

Under the Marketing Act, the Alberta member said, agriculture department, something every other industry possessed. That was the principle of the act and merely placed agriculture on a parity with other industries. It gave farmers a voice in the sales policy of their products, something they never had before.

It was impossible for western ranchers to continue under the present distribution system, Mr. Speakman warned. Thirty-five years ago, three-year-old calves sold for $30. Today the price is $15 although it costs twice as much to raise one. Only through some form of licensing could the business be carried on so that ethical practices would predominate, prices would rise and the industry be replaced on its feet.

The producer was the best man to deal with his own problems, said Mr. Speakman, combating the argument the farmer was not qualified to handle the processing machinery.

Humphrey Mitchell, Labor member for Hamilton, Essex was the next speaker. He said he believed the Prime Minister was right when he broadcast a series of speeches on the problems of the day. Other leaders should do the same but it should not be predicated on the success of the broadcast.

T. A. Thomson (Cons. Lanark), declared that nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of reforms proposed in the Speech from the Throne. Evils which had grown up through the years within the capitalist system would have to be removed before real prosperity could be achieved.
