Crowds See Jap Liner Strike Mine

LONDON, Nov. 21.—(CP)—Crowds on the east coast of Great Britain today saw the 11,950-ton Japanese liner Terukuni Maru sink slowly under the waves after striking an uncharted mine.

So slowly did the vessel sink that all 180 crew men and 28 passengers were rescued.

One eye-witness who was walking along the promenade of an east coast town said it blew up suddenly.

"Great volumes of water rose high and the ship was partially submerged," he said. "It remained in this position a little while, then sank."

Three unidentified Japanese passengers were injured slightly.

A young English-speaking Japanese said he was sitting in his cabin reading a newspaper when there was an explosion which shook the ship and threw me to the floor." He ran up on deck which already was awash.

"There was no panic because we soon saw trawlers coming towards us," he said. "We were well on the way to shore when we saw the last of our ship sink beneath the waves."

A British woman returning from China said that "immediately after the explosion an order was given for everyone to take up their lifeboats. The crew and passengers were calm and orderly and we got into boats and were swung down to sea and we had not been afloat long when a British vessel picked us up."

A special train brought the survivors to London, escorted by an Embassy Counsellor who went to port to investigate immediately on hearing of the disaster.

both ends of the Mediterranean and at the mouth of the Baltic. Whether German goods will be confiscated or impounded until the credit crisis has been decided. Because German commerce has been swept from the seas, neutral vessels are used to carry German exports under the flag of the Netherlands, Belgium, Italy, Denmark and the United States, either out of neutral or German ports.

One of Germany's biggest problems is the accumulation of foreign currency with which to buy iron ore, manganese, oil, copper, nickel, rubber, cotton, chrome and flax which she does not produce. The Reich has been getting these products either by barter or through foreign exchange. For instance, she has been shipping quantities of machinery to South America and buying nitrate for sale in the United States, transferring the United States dollars received to Europe to buy oil from Rumania, ore from Sweden and manganese from Russia.

The British navy will cripple this trade by stopping exports of machinery and other products that Germany uses to accumulate currency.

Chamberlain said the government had decided to "subject to seizure on the high seas" all "exports of German origin or ownership."

This practice had been followed during the first Great War, he said, as a measure of justified reprisals for submarine attacks on merchant ships, and it was to be put into effect now because of "many violations of international law and the ruthless brutality of German methods."

The measure is to be put into effect "shortly" by an order in council, calls for seizure of all German exports on the high seas, regardless of whether they are carried under neutral flags.

CHAMBERLAIN'S STATEMENT

Mr. Chamberlain's announcement was in answer to a question by Clement Attlee, Opposition Leader, on whether the government would take action as a result of the laying of mines which had sunk nearly a score of vessels in the last six days.

The Prime Minister began by mentioning the losses and referring to the rules governing mine laying and the Hague convention. Then he added:—

"None of these provisions has been observed by the German government in laying the mines which occasioned the losses I have mentioned. And this action is only the culmination of a series of violations of the agreement wherefore Germany has set her hand."

"I need only recall the sinking of the Athenia, with loss of 112 lives, and the subsequent destruction of British, Allied and neutral vessels by mine, torpedo and gunfire."

"These attacks have been made often without warning, and they point to an increasing extent to a complete disregard of the rules laid down in the submarine protocol wherefore Germany has a series of and of the most elementary dictates of humanity."

"The government is not prepared to allow these losses and referring to the rules governing mine laying and the Hague convention. Then he added:—

"I may remind the House that in the last war, as a measure of justified reprisals for submarine attacks on merchant ships, the exports of German origin or ownership were made subject to seizure on the high seas."

"Many violations of international law and the ruthless brutality of German methods have decided us to follow a similar course now, and an order in council will shortly be issued giving effect to this decision."

"The House cheered the statement. Heretofore the navy's detention of neutral vessels in the contraband control—control of imports to Germany—has been to seize goods believed destined directly or indirectly for Germany."

"The new order is aimed at preventing Germany from exporting by way of the southeastern of Baltic countries and through these nations by neutral ships across the high seas."

Mr. Albert Walker of Kelvin was a business visitor to O'Leary on Tuesday.
