LADIES STARVED IN SANITORIUM.

Miss Evelyn Williamson, wealthy spinster, of London, Eng., was rescued from a sanatorium at Ollala, on Puget Sound, about ten miles from here, when she was almost at the point of death from starvation. A sister, Claire, it is claimed, actually starved to death.

The sisters were touring, and in the course of their travels, came to Puget Sound. While there they felt indisposed and accepted the offer of Dr. Linda B. Hazzard, a woman physician of Seattle, to treat them. They entered her sanatorium at Ollala, passing, it is alleged, $2,000 each for the treatment.

According to Miss Williamson's friends, the sisters were starved until Claire, becoming too weak to resist added a codicil to her will making Mrs. Hazzard her executrix and handing over to her her diamonds and an annuity.

Evelyn Williamson told the British Consul at Agassatz that they were virtually kept prisoners by Mrs. Hazzard and her staff. Finally they bribed a boy to dispatch two cablegrams, one to a Miss Conway, a former nurse, in Honolulu, and the other to England. Miss Conway's reply was seized by Mrs. Hazzard and she was intercepted at Vancouver. She then went to Portland and secured the assistance of an uncle of the Misses Williamson. Before they could reach Ollala, however, Claire had died and Evelyn who formerly weighed 120 pounds, had become a living skeleton of 50 pounds in weight.

—Frenchman whom none of them had ever seen or known. When the news was first announced by the City Clerk the Aldermen themselves guffawed at it. Now they are falling over one another to secure part of the money for their own pet charities.

Dr. Guerin, the Mayor of Montreal, went to England to take part in the coronation ceremonies. While there he made some inquiries about the legacy and the Corporation of Montreal has had word for it that that poor will get at least $100,000.

THE MYSTERIOUS BENEFACTOR. The testator's name is Gustave Meurling. His residence was Mentone, in the South of France.

He was married twice. His first wife was a French Countess whose name and title are not known. The second wife died. It is understood that Meurling inherited money from the latter.

He travelled a good deal, and some time ago visited the law firm of Stibbard & Gibbons in London and asked advice about the bestowal of his property, as he had no relatives. Stibbard & Gibbons advised him to leave it to a London hospital for crippled children. He replied that, although he had considerable respect for the English people, he was not sufficiently in sympathy with them to make them his beneficiaries.

He went away, but returned later and told the firm that he had decided to leave his money to the poor of Montreal. He explained that he would have left it to the people of France, but they had disgusted him by the way in which they have treated the religious orders. On the other hand, he had the greatest admiration for the moral and religious traits of the Canadians, which he had studied while living in Canada some years ago.

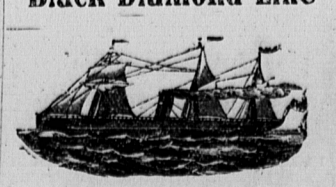

So he and the lawyers make out a will bequeathing all his property in England and France to the Corporation of Montreal to be used for the benefit of its poor. As stated before, $100,000 worth of property is in Great Britain and will be obtainable without trouble. The value of the French property is not yet known, and there may be some trouble in getting hold of it.

ADVANTAGEOUS INVESTMENTS. Since it has been found that the story is true, efforts have been made to ascertain when and where Meurling lived in Montreal. It seems that he came here some years ago with letters of introduction to the late Senator Forget, not then an occupant of one of the big arm chairs in the Red Chamber in Ottawa, but already one of the kings of the Canadian stock market, and that the Senator advised him to make some investments, which turned out very profitable.

MOUNTAIN AVALANCHE OVERCOME AT LAST. In the winter of 1904-10 an avalanche swept down the precipitous sides of the Cascade mountains at the little town of Wellington, Washington, and carried a Great Northern passenger train with almost 100 passengers aboard, to a terrible fate in the depths of the canyon below. To prevent the recurrence of such a catastrophe was the problem that confronted the Great Northern's engineers, and spurred on by James J. Hill, who declared that the tracks must be rendered absolutely safe no matter what the cost, they finally determined upon the erection of reinforced concrete snowsheds protecting all the Wellington danger zone. These have just been finished at a cost of $500,000.

Construction of these solid masonry structures for a distance of 3200 feet is regarded as a great accomplishment in the engineering world, for they are not merely coverings built over the tracks—they are indestructible hoods set into the mountain side. Future avalanches may thunder into the canyon, far below, all they please, but they will slide right over the concrete tubes, and trains may pass back and forth within them as safely as passenger traffic is carried on beneath the Hudson river in the McAdoo tunnels, or beneath the Detroit river.

We must make the mountain district impregnable against snowslides, even if an outlay of millions of dollars is necessary," declared Mr. Hill emphatically and aside from the concrete sheds the railway magnate ordered more than $1,000,000 spent in an effort to prevent blockades and delays to through trains during the winter months. Two miles of the main line near Berna east of Wellington are in process of rebuilding, new buildings were erected in Wellington.

CONSCIENCE STRICKEN WAITER RETURNS CASH. "I have some conscience left, said Henry Bartilson, of Chicago, a waiter, as he returned $4.40 which he had stolen from a guest to Arnold Pungally, maître d'hotel of the Hotel Sherman. Bartilson was one of the "extra" waiters engaged to serve the banquet given to the Delta Chiklaw fraternity delegates. He was asked by one of those he served to get refreshments not included in the banquet, and was given a $5 bill in payment which amounted to 60 cents. He delivered the order, but failed to return the change. Pungally upon receiving the guest's complaint, made good the shortage.

About four hours afterwards Bartilson returned to Pungally, and said he wanted work worse than he did the $4.40. "I just got to Chicago yesterday," he said, "and the $5 was the first first money I had handled, and it tempted me. I never did so before, and will never again. Here is the money, and if you have work I want it."
