62 men in 100 picked this over-size pen

FROM a tray of assorted pens 62 men in 100 selected the new Parker Duofold first of all when we asked them to pick out the most appealing pen.

"Handsome than gold!" was the verdict of many who saw this large, graceful barrel in Chinese-red with smart black-tipped ends, and neat gold pocket-clip.

This classic Pen was created by Geo. S. Parker, inventor of the leak-proof "Lucky Curve." It took him 30 years to perfect it, but it has taken Canada only about 8 months to make the Duofold the leading seller at hundreds of prominent counters.

Its select Iridium point is as smooth and life-enduring as a hard jewel bearing, and if not abused, is guaranteed 25 years for wear and mechanical perfection. Step up to the first pen counter and give your hand the pleasant sensation of the Duofold's business-like feel. Buy one for 30 days' approval.

If your dealer's supply is not in, give him your order subject to your approval on arrival. Or please write us, giving your dealer's name.

WHERE BLACK MEN RULE

Lady Dorothy Mills, the well known English traveller and writer, gives the following interesting account of a recent visit to the Black Republic.

My motive in visiting the Haitians was the comparatively modest one of studying civilized negro mentality, sociology, and general development, and as a side issue, to find out what remains of the sinister "Voodoo," and old, semi-occult religion handed down from their African ancestry.

Haiti is the only negro republic in the world that has attained, through its own efforts, a quite high degree of culture and civilization, built up since early in 1800, when the Haitian negroes, slaves successively of the Spanish and the French, ejected the white men from the island and started a little kingdom of their own.

When I disembarked from a little Dutch cargo boat at the capital, Port au Prince, I imagined myself to be utterly unheralded and unknown. My disillusionment was rapid. Extracts from the English and United States papers, lurid and misleading, had preceded me, representing me as an eccentric and a seeker after sensation, a "man-woman" with a gun in one hand and a vitriolic style in the other! A complete dossier had been prepared about me and the Haitian newspapers overflowed with wrath.

It took me a week to live down my imaginary self. All day, in the little hotel where I lodged, I received and talked with Haitians of every color, from ebony black to pale cafe au lait, of every class and profession. When I went out crowds followed and stared at me, and tried to get a few words of conversation. At the end of a week they had made up their minds that I was a nice, normal, friendly creature, and I was overwhelmed with hospitality and invitations of every kind.

Visit to the President.

The President, Monsieur Borno, having expressed a wish to meet me, I visited him one afternoon at his country house up in the hills. Quadron in coloring, immaculately dressed in white the linen of the tropics, speaking perfect French, he was a singularly charming man, with most courteous manners.

It was not long before I was deep in the vortex of the social life of Port au Prince, and very pleasant to find it. I was surprised at its cultivation and refinement, though it at first seemed strange to be living entirely among black or part-colored people, where the sight of one's own white face was an ingratitude, one simply lost one's color sense after a time.

In their homes, their social clubs, and their games, the Haitians absolutely resembled any little white community. Their ideals being based on their memories of the French, their social code and manner of living reminded me of those of any small French town.

The married women were gentle, home-keeping souls, beautifully mannered, and well-dressed. The young girls, like girls all the world over, had a slight tendency, deplored by their parents, to be "modern," to demand greater freedom and education to play games. Some of them were really lovely, especially the Mulattoes, with their gorgeous eyes and skins like old amber.

They were all extremely anxious to know my opinions and impressions of themselves and their country, and to know if I could trace any resemblance between them and their compatriots in Africa.

Their great recreation is dancing, and they were delighted when they found that I, too, loved to dance and when, in return for their favorite dance, the Meringue, I taught them the Blues.

At a Voodoo Ceremony.

Dancing has always been the love of the negro heart, and any night, along the rough roads that ran into the country, one might come across groups of ebony black, scantily-clad peasants stamping and whirling by the light of a flickering lantern, to the music of a tom-tom.

Once, in the heart of the mountains, I saw a "Voodoo" dance a religious ceremony accompanied by the killing of a white cock and a small pig. But civilization and Christianity have stamped out idolatry and the grosser superstitions, and the once sinister and mysterious "Voodoo" is now little but an empty husk, a ceremonial that has lost most of its old meaning.

It was with real regret that I left Haiti, carrying with me memories of a kindly, cultured, and warm-hearted people, who did much to disabuse me of the accepted Anglo-Saxon prejudice based, somewhat summarily, on a mere skin pigment. I carried with me, too, a realization of the growing significance of this little cradle of a black civilization.

BRITISH LIQUOR TRADE AND PROHIBITION IN AMERICA

The following resolution was passed unanimously at the annual Council meeting of the United Kingdom Alliance, held at Manchester on 15th October:—

"This Council records its conviction at the determination of the American people to suppress the liquor traffic is one of the greatest and most far-reaching measures of social reform ever undertaken by mankind. It views with indignation the various attempts made by the British liquor trade to break down the enforcement of the Prohibition Law by conspiring with American outlaws to smuggle intoxicating liquors into the United States; and it earnestly calls upon our Government, our Dominions, and our Colonies forthwith to denounce and suppress a traffic which, as now carried on under the British flag, is an immoral and unwarrantable interference with the domestic affairs of a friendly nation, and a growing menace to peace and good relations between this country and the United States.

SAFETY IN NUMBERS.

During his first charge a Clergyman found the women of the church entirely too much interested. Such a storm of petty squabbles arose from their over-eagerness to help that in despair he gave up. Not long afterward he met his successor.

"How are you getting along with the women?" asked the escaped minister.

"Very well," was the answer.

"There's safety in numbers."

"I found it in Exodus," was the rejoinder.

Rugged is the breast that music cannot tame.
