MODERN CABLE CONTAINS VARIETY OF MATERIALS

The little strand of cable that conveys the messages of the world from one distant point to another is a intricate design and few would suspect the quantities of materials used in its manufacture. According to the Canadian National Telegraphs whose cable connections reach all parts of the world.

The constituent parts of a modern Atlantic cable of 2,000 nautical miles are as follows: Length of iron and steel sheathing wires, 60,346 statute miles; weight of copper, 1,518,720 lbs. or 676 long tons; weight of gutta-percha, 516 long tons—length of permalloy tape, 19,055 statute miles; length of brass tape, 3,444 statute miles; length of jute yarn, 306,460 statute miles; length of cotton tape, 64,600 statute miles.

The cost of a modern cable, taking the average proportion of the different types usually employed, may be roughly estimated at $2,000 per nautical mile. The total cost of submerged is approximately $150,000.

GIRL DETECTIVES TO CLEAN UP LONDON VICE DEN'S

LONDON, Eng., Oct. 1—Vice Den's which have sprung up in London as a result of the war, are to be cleaned up by glamour girls. Not the glamour girls of the stage and beauty chorus, but girl detectives, who will wear smart tailor-made costumes, silk stockings and high-heeled shoes.

Scotland Yard has decided that women are the best people to look after the confidence tricksters, and West End hotel and bottle party crooks which have become a menace to men on leave.

Twenty of London's smartest policewomen will act as "duty pals" to the girls during their training. They will take them to big stores, hotel vestibules, and railway stations to pick up hints.

Each detective will receive from $10 to $20 a week, plus a generous allowance to enable her to dress smartly so that there is nothing about her to suggest "police".

"Cosmetic allowance" will also be made to pay for the best beauty aids. When "love-dream rouge" and "kissable lipstick" appear on her expensé sheet no questions will be asked.

Vice squads of women police are also being formed in the cities and towns to protect the new soldier and munition worker from moral dangers.

The Hon. Mrs. Gwendolyn Peel, chairman of the Women Police Campaign Committee, said: "Young girls drafted to factories in the province live alone—many of them for the first time. Some are entering undesirable clubs, and the extra woman police will put a stop to this."

More marriages took place in England and Wales last year than ever before recorded, the total being 437,406—an increase of 75,000 over 1938. This year's statistics show that marriages are still on the increase. During the last 10 months Walter Grimaldi, registrar of Tottenham, and seven assistants have officiated at a hundred weddings every Saturday morning. In April when those 25 years old registered, many young men of the class decided to marry. But since British Expeditionary Force returned to England registrars noted a slight decline in marriage applications of men in the service.

OLD PEACE CUSTOM KEPT IN WARTIME. TIVERTON, Eng., Oct. 1.—(CP)—Folk of this Devon town didn't let Hitler interfere with the centuries-old custom of perambulating the town "leat" (watercourse). Every seven years since 1250 Tiverton people have "claimed" the stream, which carries seven miles to Norwood valley springs. There the water was searched for obstructions and schoolboys whipped the stream with wands. For that they each got sixpence. "Perambulators" were given bread and cheese and cider.

MOTHERS-IN-LAW NO PROBLEM HERE.—The Assiniboine Indian tribe, a branch of the Sioux nation, who live in large numbers along the lines of the Canadian National Railways in Saskatchewan and Manitoba, believe they have solved the traditional mother-in-law problem in a unique way.

Ochanuku Gage ("The Patin Maker"), 62-year-old resident of the Carry-the-Kettle Reserve, says the Assiniboine "in-law relationship" is confusing not only to white people but to other Indians as well, although "we may have solved the mother-in-law problem."

When an Assiniboine marriage takes place the new-weds enter into a peculiar relationship with in-laws, and although the best of friends, they will not look at or speak to in-laws. Speaking is done through a third party.

If a man or woman happens to see an in-law approaching, they will avoid meeting each other by one stepping aside at a respectful distance until the other passes; if a man visits friends, he listens outside the door to ascertain if any of the voices inside belong to an in-law. If so, he will not enter. Parents-in-law will never speak the name of sons-in-law or daughters-in-law, and this is reciprocated by the latter. Should, however, one forget and accidentally name his or her in-law, there is always someone around who takes great delight in reminding them of the slip by pinching their ears.

And Ochanuku Gage doesn't know exactly how this custom originated nor why it persists. While it does solve the mother-in-law question, it still is just an "old Sioux custom," he says.

Cut Flowers Last. So lasting are the cut flowers that exquisitely dainty corsages have been made from them. There is a superficial resemblance to orchids in their dainty petals and as so a finishing touch of bright orange in the center of each flower provided by the stamens.

When the bloom is over the thrifty will see that the buds are planted outdoors somewhere. They are winter hardy. Next Spring they will send up foliage but no flowers. The flowers will come again next August and September. In this unusual thing they are like the hardy amaryllis. Well-grown bulbs will give a repeat performance without soil or water in the house again next Fall.

A sunny spot is recommended for them, but devotees of these flowers say that practically nothing will keep a colchicum bulb from blooming. They'll even bloom in a desk drawer. There's a good story, too, about an absent-minded professor. Buying some colchicum bulbs one snappy Fall day he dropped them into his overcoat pocket to take home that evening. Perceiving all about them, he was hunting for his gloves some ten days later and on searching his pockets pulled out—his colchicums all in full bloom!

SOUTH POLE EXPLORER PRAISES FORMER PILOT. LETHBRIDGE, Alta.—On his way to the Duke of Windsor's Bay Ranch in the Alberta foothills, Lincoln Ellsworth, Antarctic explorer, flew by Trans-Canada Air Lines from Vancouver to Lethbridge. It was surprised and greatly pleased to learn that the C.A. ticket office just before leaving Vancouver, he said, "that the flying field in Lethbridge was named after my Antarctic pilot, Hollick-Kenyon."

Telling a few intimate stories of Hollick-Kenyon, Ellsworth said: "I know what he thinks, how he can cook, how silent he can be when he is in the vast places at the ends of the earth. Canada is lucky to have him for an official of your very efficient trans-continental air line."

Hollick-Kenyon is assistant general superintendent, Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Colchicum Put on Good Autumn Show

For gardeners who like surprises—and few ever get beyond that particularly a surprise that brings a lot of interest for days and days and costs very little, the answer is colchicum. It is pronounced colchicum, as though all the 'c's were 'k's. Colchicum are borny flowers that bloom in the Fall and early Winter from sleek brown bulbs. In fact, they are so intent upon blooming on a window sill. They look so that they will flower, without soil, much like cactuses that are known popularly as Autumn cactuses. They have had a long and honorable history in gardens, but able bulb growers of the Pacific Northwest have been having themselves in late years and have worked out a treatment which retards the usual blooming time, so that they can be enjoyed all through September, October and November.

The bulbs are put on the bed for outside help. From each good-sized bulb come two or three stems, each of which produces from six to a dozen lovely lavender crocus-like flowers. The flower stems are two to three times as long as those of the Spring crocuses.

So lasting are the cut flowers that exquisitely dainty corsages have been made from them. There is a superficial resemblance to orchids in their dainty petals and as so a finishing touch of bright orange in the center of each flower provided by the stamens.

When the bloom is over the thrifty will see that the buds are planted outdoors somewhere. They are winter hardy. Next Spring they will send up foliage but no flowers.
