GODLY SIMPLICITY

There is a classic story of a great king who was once passing through the land, and heard a shepherd playing upon his reeds, the music of the shepherd was so sweet that it gave joy to the soul of the man laden with care, and he took the shepherd to his palace to make him a minister of joy. He found him so wise and resourceful that he clothed him with authority and made him the man who stood next to the king.

But the envious tongues that surrounded a monarch whispered that this man was a traitor. It was noticed that each day he re-

Dorothy Dix Says

ACCEPT CONDITIONS AND MAKE BEST OF YOUR LIFE

There Is Still Lots Of Sunshine And Happiness, No Matter What Perverse Circumstances Now Claim You

Dear Dorothy Dix—I live in a tourist city in Florida, and when I watch the happy, carefree husbands and wives of my own age, 65, it fills me with bitter resentment and loneliness, not toward them, but toward fate that has left me to struggle on alone, without a home of my own after living so many years secure and happy. I had money I could still be attractive and perhaps marry, but my position as nurse companion gives me few social contacts and takes away the prestige I once had. I want a home of my own, a car to ride in again, a congenial husband of whom I need not be ashamed, ample security and a chance to do the things I long to do. It is hard to suppress a feeling of bitterness when I see wealthy men of my own age, many of whom no doubt are single, following with their eyes the much younger women who do not need them. Can you tell me why such things happen?

NONE

ANSWER—It is a sad thing for a woman who has had a good husband and a beautiful home and lived luxuriously for many years to be left alone and poor when she is old, and you have my heartfelt sympathy. But do you not realize that you are making a bad matter worse by your wishful dreaming of things that cannot happen to you? Do you remember what Tennyson said about a sorrow's crown of sorrow being remembering happier things? I know plenty of innocent little girls who know nothing of the world whatever who pose as blasé sophisticates. And still others who do indiscreet things not because they want to but because they want to appear wicked and devil-may-care.

And look at all the thousands of girls around you who imitate the hair-dos and the actions of the cinema stars. If that isn't a pose, what have you?

BROILED MEATS

When broiling meats, best results will be obtained by turning the meat only once. Broil on one side until the steak or chops are nicely browned, season and turn. Then broil on the other side, season and spread with butter. Serve on a hot platter with appropriate garnish. Length of time for broiling depends on the distance of the meat from the flame, the thickness of the meat and individual taste—whether you like meat rare or well done.

Amateur Glamour Girl

By Joseph Chadwick

CHAPTER VI

When Beth Harvey had gone, Tonia went into her bedroom and looked at herself in the mirror. Her face was pale, her eyes full of hurt and when she tried to tell herself that David Warren's double dealing didn't matter, no smile would come. She felt as though she'd never smile again, in spite of what Jim Kirby had said, this time she had really been in love. She could stand being used by someone she didn't love, but she couldn't bear the thought that David had used her merely to publicize himself.

She stared at herself, and said bitterly, "So you're the girl who has everything? Fame and fortune yes, everything but love!"

Then she checked herself, and thought, "Now I'm being dramatic. Always the actress!"

A Morning Smile

After the service the preacher, an old-fashioned type, favored the old lady with his views on eternal punishment. There was a great deal of fire and brimstone in it. "I don't believe it," the old lady said impulsively. "No human constitution could possibly stand it."

A kind-hearted old lady noticed a tramping-looking man gazing in to an eating-house window. She found the sight touching, and wishing to give the man the price of a good dinner without hurting his feelings, pretended she had picked up a coin from this pavement. "Look what I've found!" she said, as she handed him a florin. "You can have it; it was nearest to you."

The man made a grab for the coin. "Thank you kindly!" he said with a grin of delight. "It's just dropped out of my pocket! Wait a minute, I'll give you a penny for yourself!"

HE THOUGHT HE KNEW, BUT HE WAS WRONG—This time it had been the real thing. She had left the city and its lights far behind before she realized her lack of a destination, but she gave that only a brief thought, it didn't matter. She simply wanted to go far.

The rooster was big and fast, and she kept the speedometer wavering between fifty-five and sixty. She was surprised when a glance at the dashboard clock told her it was close to eleven o'clock. She had driven for hours.

She turned into a gas station combined with a lunchroom. She told the attendant to fill the car's tank, then turned to go inside to get a sandwich.

The attendant said, "Better take your switch key along. A car was stolen here tonight."

Tonia took the key and went into the lunchroom. When she returned and paid for the gasoline, she saw the attendant staring at her.

"Ain't I seen you before?" he asked.

"Maybe you have," she said, "but not in person."

As she drove away, she knew that the idea of traveling incognito was hopeless. People always were asking her that, and later realizing who she was.

Several miles farther on, she saw a big truck marked beside the road. A girl sat on the running board.

Tonia slowed her car and stopped.

"Could you tell me where this road leads?" she called.

The other girl rose and came to the roadside. Tonia saw that she wore glasses and was badly dressed, ed, but she also saw something that few people would have noticed. Despite the girl's atrocious clothes and her glasses, she was attractive.

"I really don't know anything about the road except that it leads eventually to Seabroth."

"Seabroth? I never heard of it."

"It's a vacation resort. A small place."

"It sounds all right. I think I'll try it," Tonia smiled.

"I was on my way there, but my car was stolen. The driver of this truck gave me a lift. Then it broke down."

"You've had hard luck. Want to ride with me?"

"Do you mind? I don't know when Michael Shane—that's the truck driver—will get back. He's hunting a telephone."

"I don't mind," Tonia said. "In fact, I'd like to have you."

"Sally opened her hand bag. "Would you wait while I write a note?" I just want to thank Michael."

"I'll wait," Tonia said.

Sally wrote the note and stuck it in the truck's windshield.

Then, as she climbed into the roadster, Tonia asked, "Is he a friend of yours?"

"Oh, no. I never met him before tonight."

"But wasn't that risky, accepting a lift from a stranger?"

"You might think so," Sally said, "but he's an unusual sort of truck driver."

Tonia gave her an amused glance. The girl's tone, more than her words, had said that he was an unusual sort of truck driver.

FLATTERING WHITE

White accessories, to be flattering, must be kept spotlessly clean. To keep fresh white gloves on hand, you will probably need several pairs. One day's wear will show considerable soil. After each wearing wash them in thick suds and lukewarm water, then turn them inside out and put them through a second suds bath. Rinse thoroughly. To hurry drying, wrap in an absorbent towel to blot up excess moisture, then hang to dry. Washable leather gloves should be dried in the shade.
