POTATO AND EXPORT TRADE

Sir,—I wish to say with regard to the removal of the inspection on potatoes that Joseph Read & Co., Ltd., were not the sole workers in this matter. Premier Matheson assisted the firm with the greatest ability and forcefulness, telegraphing the Department at Ottawa as strongly as he could and backing up our demands. Regarding the potato crop, which is unusually short the farmer who advises not shipping is not exercising good judgment with regard to farming. When potatoes are 40c. and oats 40c. the wise farmer will feed his oats and sell his potatoes. All we want is the seed for next year's crop and enough for home consumption with economy. There will probably be more potatoes shipped this year from this Province than have been exported for many years. Potatoes at 40c. in the fall is as good as in the spring anyway and for feeding purposes oats are worth many times potatoes, bushel for bushel. They can be supplemented with the turnips and other root crops. I am Sir &c. JOS READ. October 22, 1915

SCHOOLMATES MEET IN FRANCE

The following letter has been received by Mrs. J. T. Clarkin, City from her son Jack:—

Brigade Headquarters, 1st Canadian Cavalry Base. Dear Mother:—Just a line tonight as we have been on the march since noon, only arriving here about two hours ago, and it is now 11 p. m. This has been a daily occurrence for the past few days. I do not mind it much excepting this last march as the only pair of socks I have are all holes with some yarn around them. Saw Ray Fitzgerald yesterday. He arrived in France the other day and is with the 3rd Canadian Mounted Rifles. He looks well and has not changed any since we went to West Kent School together. I was very glad to see him although only had a couple of minutes talk together. We moved soon after as the Germans got the range and put a shell in an old barn a hundred yards away. We just made the move in time, when we were going down the road they shot over a good many looking like high explosive shells. The Shrapnel bursting in the air is a very beautiful cloud of smoke a fleecy white color on the upper part gradually deepening into a yellowish creamy color at the lower part of the smoke of gas. Most people enjoy looking at it from a distance, it is much more healthy. I must close now and write when we get settled down again. Got papers, parcels, etc. Love to the girls and all my love to you. JACK.

MOSS FOR RED CROSS

Captain F. M. McRae in an interesting letter to Mr. J. E. B. McCready describes a "native" industry in Scotland in the preparation of sphagnum moss and suggests that something might be done here in the same direction. Captain McRae asks that his letter to Mr. McCready be published in The Guardian together with another letter on the subject which appeared in the Scotsman. The communications are as follows:—

"Dear Sir,—While on a recent visit to the West Highlands I noticed that all the guests at the hotel in Glenelg, where I was stopping (many of whom were eminent people from Glasgow, Edinburgh and London) were busy every day gathering sphagnum moss sun drying it by spreading on newspapers on the ground, picking it over by hand and removing all grass and foreign substances when partially dried, then completing the drying process, packing in cotton bags about the size of a pillow slip and mailing them to the War Office. The spectacle of wealthy rusticators in a Highland glen being so industriously employed naturally aroused my curiosity and on investigating found that this variety of moss is the greatest absorbent known, shriving from 6 lbs. in weight when gathered to 10 or more when dried. Unlike cotton wool it absorbs horizontally as well as vertically—that is, sideways as well as straight out from the wound, and besides has great healing properties not found in any other substance of the kind. Of course the moss is sterilised and put up in muslin bags of a suitable size by the War Office authorities before being sent out to the hospitals and ambulance corps at the front.

If I mistake not the swamps of Prince Edward Island produce this moss in abundance. If not of this variety it is of one very similar and would probably be equally good. It grows in Scotland in swamps and wet spots on the mountain sides all the way down to the sea level. It also grows in England and on the Continent and is to be regretted that this information was not secured earlier in the season so as to give ample time to gather this year's crop. An enclosing herewith several samples kindly given me by Mr. Boyd, an eminent solicitor of Edinburgh, who eat his two sons in the war and who while enjoying his vacation spent some of the day and night gathered and sorted to interested Islanders there will be no difficulty in identifying the moss. Am also enclosing a letter on the subject which appeared in the "Scotsman" and which should be carefully read by intending shippers.

To that class of the home population who for various valid reasons, from sex exemption to physical disability, are unable to assist in their country's cause, the gathering of sphagnum moss might open a pleasant and profitable avenue, and to that other class who would rather have their names go down to posterity on the "Roll of Honour," who prefer to "fiddle while Rome burns," whose infant progeny will be a cure to the future of their race, who preached peace when there was no peace, who denied the expenditure necessary to protect the civilised against the savage, who though a part of the national fabric leave it to others to take care of the national defence, who while enjoying the benefits of British citizenship refuse to assume its responsibilities, who were loud-mouthed in opposition to war but remain at home and silently gather in its golden profits, who in the darkest hour in their country's history turn a deaf ear to the appeals for help and the call of heaven itself. If they will only gather the moss and send it forward in good condition the War Office will pay them ten pounds (£10) per ton. I am, Sir, etc., F. B. McRAE, Capt. Canadian Machine Gun School, Shorncliffe.

P.S.—If any other kind of moss is available of similar nature forward me small packages of it and I will have it passed upon by the proper authorities and will notify you by cable of the result. If any samples are sent to me I can refer to them by number in the cable. Braemar, St. P. E. I.

Sir,—The article on sphagnum was timely and interesting. We, too, have been delightfully busy during our few weeks of holiday gathering this healing moss in our Highland village. We have dispatched several sacksful to our work-party in Edinburgh, which completes the final stages of cleansing the moss from all impurities, and putting it up into the various-sized muslin bags suitable to surgical dressings. It is a pity that the sphagnum by local managers in all these centres, for there are enormous quantities which must now remain ungathered this year. Let us hope that this time next year the demand for it will have ceased with the horrible war.

One of two notes of our practical experience may still be of use.

1. We have been told on good authority that the best kind of sphagnum for curative purposes is that which is not only feathered along the whole stem, but the stems grown very close together in masses. Where the moss in bulk is not so absorbent.

2. The process of drying it is somewhat difficult. When pulled, the moss should be squeezed with the hands. We tried passing it in quantities through a small clothes-wringer, but we think the result is not so satisfactory; the moss seems to lose some of its resiliency.

3. When the sun is hot the moss may be partially dried by being spread out as thinly as possible on newspapers, or boards. If spread on the grass, and if left out till the dew of evening has been absorbed, the moisture from the air will be gathered in it should be gathered into bags, and respread next morning, if there is strong sun again. It should not be dried before a fireplace or by a stove.

4. When the moss arrives at maturity it begins to wither, and loses its spongy and absorbent character. Dry clumps of the moss are now to be found on rocky points, but they are past their prime, but still (in the middle of September) we can find any amount in excellent condition by the burn-sides and in marshy ground. The opportunity for collecting it this year will soon be over, so let all who have the chance make this valuable hay while the blessed sun shines, as it has been doing during our three weeks here of beneficent harvesting. I am, Sir, etc., C. M. B.

CAPTAIN JACK JENKINS IN THE TRENCHES

Lieut. Col. S. R. Jenkins received a letter from his son Captain Jack Jenkins from the trenches in Belgium Monday. He writes in the best of spirits as the following extracts show:—

"I am happy and very hard worked. I have been appointed senior medical officer for the Brigade which is a sort of D. A. D. M. S. I am responsible to Colonel F. O. Fotheringham, A. D. M. S. General Jones, Col. Foster and Col. F. O. Fotheringham came up to the Dressing Station the other day and broke the news to me. They were all very nice and seemed to think it quite an honour which I certainly appreciate."

Later, out of the trenches and back in his billet, Captain Jenkins adds:—

"At present I am quite busy working out the analyses of some water for metallic poisons. I had a very complete little field laboratory. All this work is extra to my regimental duties which, as you may imagine are not very light. We remain out of the trenches five days and then go back in again. We had an average hard time, the casualties were average and the weather bad, rained first four days we were in. I made a complete tour of the trenches every day which was a big job. The wizzo bang shells used by the Germans are nerve-racking sort of things. They wizzo over the trench tearing down some of the sand bags, sprinkling one with clay and making the most infernal noise. I think the moral effect is worse than the actual harm they do. There is, however more danger going up and down the roads and communication trenches than actually in the fire trenches. Most of these roads are covered with machine gun fire, also a large number of stray bullets. Captain Enwright of Quebec, M. O. of the 22nd was the first officer of our brigade to be wounded. He got hit in the thigh; he was standing out in the front of his dressing station ready to hand over to the incoming unit when he was hit. In place of five days out he will likely get as many weeks. Things are not as lively on our front as elsewhere, but you can expect big doings rather soon."
