

SATURDAY,

WILL Your LAYING HOUSE BE WORKING Full Blast NEXT WINTER?

If you ordinarily raise only a few chickens, yet have housing for more—or could convert a shed or loft into laying quarters easily and cheaply—may be you should be considering a fair-sized family flock. Using table scraps, skim milk or buttermilk and short green pasture to advantage, you can raise such a flock at surprisingly low cost, and make them contribute a surprisingly large proportion of the nest-foods needed on your table, as well as for sale.

If you raise poultry on a larger scale, and it looks as if your laying house would not be filled right up to efficient working capacity next winter, maybe you should be considering bringing along some good pullet replacements to fill it up. After summer losses and fall culling, many laying pens are half empty by midwinter—certainly not working "full blast" for Britain, or Canada, or you. A batch of summer chicks, well handled, should be ready to go to work at just about the right time.

Leghorns, day-old or started, now ready for immediate shipment. Plenty of other breeds hatching in July. See your nearest Bray Hatchery agent, or order direct.

In the daytime a busy bank teller, or clerk, or brick-layer or the holder of any of the myriad jobs which occupy civilians; in the evening, on week-ends or at camp, a trim efficient soldier. This is a Reserve Army soldier illustrating both phases of his life in wartime. — (Canadian Army Photo.)

Steinbeck Describes Vital Role Of Mary Ruth's Ground Crew

Unpublished Heroes Work All Night to Prepare Bomber for Raid; Nervously, They 'Sweat It Out' Until Their Ships Roar Home

(By John Steinbeck)

BOMBER STATION IN ENGLAND July 3.—The ground crew is still working over the Mary Ruth. Master Sergeant Pierce, of Oregon, is the crew chief. He has been long in the Army and he knows his engines. They say of him that he owns the Mary Ruth but he lends her to the skipper occasionally. If he says a light is off, it is off. He has been checking the engine a good part of the night. The bombardier may have been dressed in coveralls and baseball caps.

Nose Is Polished

The gunners have mounted their guns now and are testing the slides. A ground man is polishing the newly mended nose, rubbing every bit of dirt from it, so that the people haven't been very friendly to his target.

A jeep drives up, carrying the officers—Brown, Queenin, Bailey and Ferick. They spill a number of little square packets on the ground, one for each man. Captain Brown distributes them. They contain maps of the countries near the target, concentrated food and maps. Brown says: "Now, if we should get into any trouble don't go in the direction of—because the people haven't been very friendly there. Go toward—you'll find plenty of help there." The men take the packets and slip them in pockets below the knees in their coveralls.

The sun is just below the horizon now and there are fine pink puff clouds all over the sky. The captain looks at his watch. "I guess we better get going," he says. The other Brown, the tall gunner, runs over. He hands over two rings, a cameo and another. "I forgot to leave these," he says. "Will you put them under my pillow?" The crew scrambles to their places and the door is slammed and locked. The waist doors are open, of course with the guns peering out of them, lashed down now, but immediately available. The long scallops of the cartridge belts drape into each one.

Engines Warm Up

The captain waves from his high perch. His window sits right over the ship's name—Mary Ruth, Memories of Moolie. The engines turn over and catch one at a time and roar as they warm up. And now, from all over the field, come the burning roars of starting engines. From all over the field the great ships come rumbling from their dispersal points into the main runways. They make a line like giant bugs, a parade of them, moving down to the take-off stretch.

The captain signals and two ground crew men in and pull out the chocks from in front of the wheels and dart out again. The Mary Ruth guns her motors and then slowly crawls out along her entrance and joins the parade. Along the runway the first ship whips out and gathers speed and takes the air, and behind her comes another and behind another, until the flying line of

NOTICE TO LANDLORDS

The Rentals of All Housing Accommodations Rented for the First Time Must be Fixed by a Rentals Committee

No later than thirty days after making the first lease for any housing accommodation the landlord must apply to a local Rentals Committee to have the rent fixed.

- This applies to
- (i) new houses, new apartments, new flats or new duplexes rented for the first time since December 10th, 1942;
 - (ii) apartments, duplexes or flats created by conversion and rented for the first time since December 10th, 1942;
 - (iii) houses, apartments, duplexes or flats which have been owner-occupied or vacant since October 11th, 1941, and are now being rented for the first time since that date.

In order to know what rent to ask, landlords may apply to a Rentals Committee to have the rent fixed before offering the accommodation for rental, or

Landlords may rent the accommodation and have the rent subsequently confirmed or fixed BUT IN THESE CASES LANDLORDS MUST APPLY TO A RENTALS COMMITTEE TO HAVE THE RENT CONFIRMED OR FIXED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS OF MAKING THE LEASE.

Applications for the fixing of maximum rentals of new accommodations in PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND are to be made to the clerk of the County Court for the district in which the accommodation is situated.
