The Realm of Rubber

We have to be careful in the selection of rubber goods and you should be as careful as we.

Between the highest grade and the wholly bad there is not very much difference in external appearance, but the difference is soon found out if you happen to get hold of an unworthy kind. We carry different grades of which the cheapest are good and the best are the finest to be had. Each kind is sold for just what it is and just the right price.

CITY DRIFTS TO ITS DOOM.

LONDON, Feb. 12—A Constantinople despatch says that business is dead in the capital, and many commercial houses bankrupt. Cholera is prevalent on the Asiatic shore, incendiary fires are common, yet there is gaiety "thus," says the despatch, "amid laughter, arson, dancing, and light hearted immorality, the city drifts to its doom."

DREDGE ON FIRE.

ST. JOHN, Feb. 12—G. S. Mayes dredge "Beaver" is afire and likely to be seriously damaged.

THERE ARE OTHERS.

It has become fashionable in certain places which are moving, in some directions, at a more rapid pace than Prince Edward Island is, to smile superiorly at the fact that we have so far refused to admit the automobile into our sacred and secluded precincts. There are others who also hesitated before making the plunge.

In a book which has recently taken the British reading public by storm, "The Modern History of the English People" dealing only with the years from 1880 to 1898, the author deals, not as is customary among historians—with the political changes, but with the social and economic changes, the real history of the people. From this book we learn that in 1894 "England was still watching helplessly the advance of the motor car invention abroad. From her own roads such cars were banned. The chief centre of activity was France where several firms were showing what astonishing power and force internal combustion engines could produce."

Legal provisions enacted that every mechanical locomotive on a highway must be preceded by a man walking with a red flag to warn drivers of horses. This legislation only ceased to exist in 1896. It would be interesting to know how many motor cars are in use in Great Britain today but this the historian has not attempted to give.

In the same connection the author refers to the introduction of the bicycle. This innovation, it would appear, was dreaded not so much on account of the effect upon horses as of the shock to the feelings of the solid Briton when he saw that there was danger of women taking kindly to the new machine. "In 1894," he informs us, "the solid Briton met women not only riding bicycles, which he had not as yet admitted was a proper occupation for them, but actually riding them without the hampering accompaniments of either a skirt or a chaperon."

The new woman with her symbolical latch key was a purely middle-class product and she shook that class profoundly. It was all very well to have a wholesome dislike of her novels and to dismiss her as a neurotic; but she grew into the national life, she had a way of presenting herself in athletic shapes on the tennis lawn or golf links which defied the most staid and solid Briton to be otherwise than proud of her.

And so the motor car came and the new woman came, both contrary to the established order of things in England, and both, today, are an inseparable part of the national life. We in Prince Edward Island have admitted the new woman, or perhaps she came without our permission. Anyway she is here and we could not live without her. She does things that her grandmother would not have considered decorous or proper but in the changed light of the Twentieth Century her doings are as clear and as true as were those of her saintly grandmother. And so we, like England and other places, change unconsciously and, unconsciously too, our eyes and our hearts become adjusted to the changes so that they do not jar. Who knows but that, in our adjustments, we may yet look with kindlier and more tolerant eyes even upon the motor car which is called the automobile?

SACRIFICE.

"The paths of glory lead but to the grave." In the annals of scientific research, of adventure, of foolhardy attempts at the possible or the impossible, fruitful or fruitless, there is perhaps not a more pathetic story than that which is now being told piecemeal of the fate of Captain Robert Scott and his party who perished on return from their "successful" trip to the South Pole.

The story has been told, partially, in our despatches. It was discovered, only partially, by the searching party who found the bodies of Captain Scott and his three companions in Scott's tent, in latitude 86, and with the bodies, the painfully written records. They were only eleven miles from their main depot when death overtook them, stayed with them, gradually crept up upon them and overcame them.

While watching the inevitable approach of the last enemy the record was written. It is fragmentary, incomplete, tragic. They had reached the pole on January 18th, 1912, and started on return. One died of concussion of the brain, the result of an accident; another with feet and hands frozen and who, notwithstanding unspeakable suffering, had kept pace with the party for days, "eager to anticipate his fate," went out of the camp, into the night and the blizzard, saying he "was just going outside and might be gone some time." His companions knew where he was going and "though we tried to dissuade him we knew it was the act of a brave man and an English gentleman." The others perished of slow starvation. Captain Scott did "not regret this journey which has shown that Englishmen can endure hardships, help one another and meet death with as great fortitude as ever in the past." A request that "a rich country like ours will see that those who are dependent on us are properly provided for," concludes the tragic record.

A cairn and cross erected by the search party over the three bodies and a similar monument to the memory of the one whose body they were unable to find, now stand in the silent stretches of that lone ice field, where no eyes, save those perhaps of others in search of glory and death, will ever see them.

As a result of the expedition there are some "thirty pounds of geological specimens which will be of great scientific value," the cairns, the widows and orphans of the victims and another proof that "Englishmen can endure hardships, help one another and meet death with as great fortitude as ever in the past."

To the ordinary unadventurous reader the price paid and the results attained seem sadly out of proportion. The curiosity of science may be partially gratified, some additional geographical knowledge may be obtained and these, added to the total sum of human knowledge cannot be said to be valueless but the results seem pitifully small in comparison with the price.

The spirit of adventure is not rare in the world and to it is due perhaps the greatest strides in the world's progress. The youth bearing "the banner with the strange device" still climbs the dizzy alpine height and still traverses the way of danger, it may be for the honor of planting the banner at a greater height than that attained by his fellows, it may be to open the way to larger and more fruitful fields. In either case the world admires his pluck and his endurance and his courage.

It admires only the admirable, however, and whatever else will be said in history of the expedition that has so tragically closed it will be said to the everlasting credit of those who perished that, till death, they stood true to each other and that they met the inevitable with the fortitude of men.

NOTES

A report that The Guardian has changed hands, wired abroad by an over-anxious correspondent, has ripened into the assurance which usually comes of frequent repetition, but the statement is incorrect, although no doubt published in good faith by some of our valued exchanges. The Guardian is, however, doing business at the old stand under the same ownership and management as for years past.

As a result of the prospective expenditures in Prince Edward Island in the near future real estate has taken on a different complexion in the eyes of its owners. Men who a few years ago would have easily yielded to the temptation to sell their farms would find it much harder to part with them today and have good cause to rejoice that they still own them. We have cited cases in which values have gone up one hundred per cent within the past few weeks and there are more such. We understand that options have been taken on properties in Charlottetown which have been in the market for some time and it is expected that some big sales will be made shortly. This is Prince Edward Island's growing time.

HARVEY MORROW DEAD

H. Harvey Morrow died last Thursday morning, Feb. 6, at the residence of his aunt, Mrs. James McDonald, 44 White St., East Boston, from an affection of the heart which became acute two weeks ago. Deceased was born in Souris, P. E. I., 47 years ago. He was educated in the public schools of that town and at the age of twenty-one removed to California with his father, the late James O. Morrow, who was one of the leading merchants of his day, a man who commanded the respect and affection of the whole community. After a residence of twenty-three years on the Pacific Coast, where his father died in the early nineties, Harvey returned to Boston three years ago, where he lived up to the time of his death. Harvey Morrow was a most lovable character, exuberant in spirit and of amiable disposition; his chief delight seemed to be in having others share the happiness which he in such large measure possessed himself. His face was foreign even to a resemblance of a frown, and his many friends will always remember it as such, while his memory will be treasured as one beloved and respected. Funeral services were held at his late home last Friday evening, where friends and relatives had gathered in large number, Rev. Charles J. Jones, pastor of Trinity Baptist Church, officiating. Mr. Jones paid a fitting tribute to the qualities of mind and heart of the deceased. Mrs. Morrow, for whom great sympathy is felt, is in California and was unable to be present at her son's last illness. Havelock, a younger brother, prominent in the life of his western home, crossed the continent to be at the bedside of the departed—to exchange their last farewells. The remains were taken to the morning train en route to the coast in charge of his brother Havelock, where they will be interred, far away from the land which gave him birth. Truly

"Our steps have wandered wide,
Our fathers' graves beside."

There they will sleep on unmindful of the recurring seasons, with sunshine and rain, with an air laden with the fragrance of blossoming fruit, with the old Pacific beating a ceaseless dirge on its sea-washed rocks. Their unguarded graves will be hallowed in memory, and the ravages of time will not disturb their dreamless slumber. The towering Rockies in the dim distance, like a grim sentinel, seem to keep an eternal vigil. The willing grass, that fringes the path, will bow before the footsteps of one who is heavy of heart, and bowed down with the weight of years, ever beckoning her on to a higher and better life. And every flower laid upon their graves will be fertilized by the tears of one who loved them both.

NATURAL GAS EXPLOSION SMASHES THINGS.

MONCTON, February 11—A terrific explosion occurred here at a quarter to one this morning which wrecked the Abrams' foundry, doing damage to the extent of $30,000, injuring three men and badly wrecking the building of the Record Foundry and Machine company situated nearby. It was one of the most violent explosions ever known here and the report was felt all over the city. The Abrams' building is a total wreck, the roof being entirely shorn off and the sides blown to pieces. Pieces of steel which were in the building flew in every direction, and as a result Farner and Hinchey, two members of the gas company, and the night watchman of the building were badly injured. They were cut about the head, face and body terribly and had to be taken to the hospital.

HEADACHY, BILIOUS, UPSET? "CASCARETS."

It's your inactive liver and bowels—You need Cascarets sure.

You're bilious, you have a throbbing sensation in your head, a bad taste in your mouth, your eyes burn, your skin is yellow, with dark rings under your eyes; your lips are parched. No wonder you feel ugly, mean and ill-tempered. Your system is full of bile not properly passed off, and what you need is a cleaning up inside. Don't continue being a bilious nuisance to yourself and those who love you, and don't resort to harsh physics that irritate and injure. Remember that most disorders of the stomach, liver and intestines can be quickly cured by morning with gentle, thorough Cascarets—they work while you sleep. A 10-cent box from your druggist will keep your liver and bowels clean; stomach sweet and your head clear for months. Children love to take Cascarets, because they taste good and never gripe or sicken.
