THE CRY OF THE PESSIMIST.

It was almost cruel of the Montreal Witness to tell the manufacturers that story of what occurred when the Liberal party came into power in 1896. It appears that at that time, certain prominent flour manufacturers were so certain that the country was ruined by the change of Government that he declared on the Exchange and in private that "he should close down his mills and retire to England, as he was satisfied that the milling interest in Canada had received its death blow." Nothing of the kind happened, however, and the milling and other interests have gone on prospering and to prosper.

It was ever thus on a change of Government, or the adoption of a change of fiscal policy in the Mother Country or in Canada. Disappointment breeds pessimism. The intense partisan sees no good in any party but his own, or in any policy but that to which he has given a perhaps unreasoned support. Blue ruin was predicted to follow the adoption of the preferential tariff in Canada and of the Lloyd George budget in Great Britain, but the test of experience has silenced the croakers in both cases.

A CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

J. C. Underlay in a well-reasoned letter which appeared in The Examiner of yesterday points out how the validity of all legislation at Ottawa is placed in doubt by the injustice done to this Province in the matter of our representation. By the constitution our representation in the Senate is fixed at four members, and our representation in the House of Commons is fixed in proportion to that of Quebec according to population. Neither the Government nor the Parliament of Canada has power to change these conditions.

But Quebec has been more than doubled in area since the British North America Act was passed. Is it fair, just, or constitutional to measure our representation by this enlarged measure? The Government would be acting most arbitrarily and unconstitutionally were they to increase the representation of Ontario or Quebec in the Senate from twenty-four members as it is now, to twenty-five, if they did so, Parliament would not be constitutionally constituted and the validity of any of its acts might be challenged. Following this course of reasoning, is any act of Parliament valid, in the Senate of which Parliament Prince Edward Island has been arbitrarily deprived for two years of one fourth of its representation?

The constitutional points raised by Mr Underlay are important. But the question of justice is still more so. Prince Edward Island has been hardly dealt with by the terms of a bad bargain with Canada. But the evil has been intensified by the arbitrary and most unjustifiable conduct of the Government in refusing to the Province for two sessions her constitutional representation in the Senate. This action is the more reprehensible because our Province is weak in numbers and influence, Ontario or Quebec, being strong, are in no danger of such despotic treatment. If either of those Provinces had now but one half its Senate seats filled, and the Government refused to make the necessary appointments there would be an insurrection.

THE CORONATION OATH.

By the revised form of the Coronation Oath the King will "profess, testify and declare that he is a faithful member of the Protestant Reform Church, by law established in England," without making any offensive reference to the Roman Catholic Church.

"The Victorians have to win from the Crystals in the game on Friday evening to have a chance for the trophy. Can they do it? Come up and see them try.

And as to changes of Government, we have had a number of changes from one party to the other in the control of the Dominion and of each of the several Provinces. Perhaps in all there have been twenty-five or thirty such changes, and almost any thoughtful and candid person conversant with our political history will admit that at least three fourths of such changes have been in the best interests of the Dominion or the Province immediately affected.

In nine cases out of ten any new Government is a better Government in its first five years, at least, than any long-standing Government in the last five years of its existence. It is true that the new broom will sweep cleaner than an old one. Liberal or Tory makes no difference as to the general application of the rule. When did a change of Government bring blue ruin upon the Dominion or upon a Province? Not in forty years past at least. So with the reciprocal trade agreement. It is safe to say that the men who are now crying out loudest against it will be silenced by the first year or two of experience under its actual working.

references to any other church. Practically the only objection to the revised oath now comes from a section of the English Church, who object to the words "Protestant Reformed Church." In introducing the bill which embodied the new oath of accession, Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister answered the objection as follows:

"Those are the words already used in the Act of Settlement. You cannot get out of that. The insertion of the words 'Protestant Reformed,' which are not to be found in the third section of the Act of Settlement, seems to us to give strength and additional definiteness to the promise so conveyed. If it is said that these words are unnecessarily introduced, I reply again that both in the Bill of Rights and in the other provisions of the Act of Settlement, the Church of England is described as the Protestant Church and as the Reformed Church. At least the religion which is taught by the Church of England is described as the Protestant and Reformed Religion."

At this distance and speaking from outside of the pale of the Anglican Church it seems difficult to find any good reason for the objection which the British Premier thus answered. And there can be no doubt that the references to the Bill of Rights and the Act of Settlement are historically accurate.

Protests against reciprocity are reported from the sections where fruit is grown in Nova Scotia and south western Ontario. And the same sort of protests come from the fruit-growers of New York and California. It will surely be marvellous if a free exchange of fruit shall prove ruinous on both sides of the line. Reason and common sense will tell that if more American fruit enters Canada, more Canadian fruit will enter the United States and this for the general benefit.

Postmaster General Lemieux has begun the introduction of stamp-selling machines at the post offices in Canada. It is a sort of penny-in-the-slot machine. But it appears that they do not always work in reliable fashion. The other day when the Postmaster General announced in the House of Commons that he purposed a further introduction of these stamp sellers, Mr. Foster arose to say: "The Minister may not have heard what took place down at the Ottawa post office. A young lady wanted a cent stamp, she put in her cent, and the one cent stamp came out. But the blamed thing kept on turning out stamps one after the other without the money. It frightened the young lady, and she took to her heels and ran away. She made complaint, and I believe either the police or the engineering department were called, and in due time they stopped the thing."
