JOURNALIST

Tributes to the dean of American journalism, as he was sometimes called, came tonight from all parts of the country.

Frank B. Noyes, President of the Associated Press and publisher of the Washington Evening Star, said: "I am deeply shocked at the unexpectedness of his death. He has been an important figure in journalism for many years and held a unique position."

Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York commented: "American journalism has lost one of its pioneers and outstanding characters. Mr. Brisbane's editorials of 30 years or so ago were an inspiration to me."

Master of a brisk-paced, simple style of writing, Brisbane kept his editorial finger on the pulse of the world—writing or dictating his daily comments from wherever he happened to be, a few hours before "deadline" to make them up-to-the-minute in timeliness.

A native of Buffalo, N. Y., he received his newspaper baptism at the age of 19. He left the New York Sun to become managing editor of the New York World for seven years. Then, in 1897, he relinquished his $15,000-a-year post on the World for an $8,000-a-year job on Mr. Hearst's New York Journal to gain more freedom for experimenting with his journalistic ideas.

Unrestricted, he scored immediate and sensational success. Within four months, under his deft touch, the Journal's circulation shot up. By arrangement with William Randolph Hearst, Brisbane received a tidy percentage for each new reader money to Marshal Chang for "expenses of his army."

Former King Takes Part In Church Service

(A. P. by Guard's Special Wire) VIENNA, Dec. 25—Edward, Duke of Windsor, read the story of the Nativity from the lectern of Vienna's Anglican Church today.

The former King's part in the service was that of lay reader. He read the second scripture lesson.

Rev. G. H. D. Grimes, Chaplain of the British legation, preached on "womankind."

The Duke read verses one to 20 of the second chapter of St. Luke in a clear and assured tone.

He listened attentively to the sermon and participated in the responses and other parts of the service.

At the conclusion, the congregation sang "God Save the King," the former Sovereign joining.

A mid-afternoon after a turkey dinner at the residence of the British Minister, Sir Walford Selby, the Duke returned to Chateau Enzelsfeld. He told friends he was "very comfortable there" and might remain until the Baron and Baroness Rothschild, his host and hostess, return to Paris next month.

Both the church congregation and Edward's fellow guests at luncheon gained the impression that the Duke was a happy man, enjoying himself to the utmost.

Rev. Mr. Grime, in his sermon, spoke of the Virgin Mary as the ideal type of maiden, mother and woman.

At luncheon, Edward disclosed his chief immediate desire is to learn to ski well. He said he had never, so far, got beyond the "nursery slopes." This year he intends to tackle more difficult intended Christmas greetings to the guests.

moned his ablest lieutenants over the holidays.

Hitler's alternatives, to send aid openly to the Spanish Insurgents or to abandon them altogether, was considered in authoritative French quarters as the cornerstone of future European diplomacy.

If Hitler decides on outright intervention in Spain, well-informed sources said, he might find the Reich's economic plight would receive slight consideration in London and Paris.

If, on the other hand, he chooses complete neutrality, they predicted, he would be assured of a sympathetic hearing on Germany's needs as part of negotiations for a new Locarno agreement.

They suggested a complete "hands-off-Spain" policy by Germany might lead to a reorganization of European collective security maintenance of the status quo in the Mediterranean and a grant of colonies to the Reich.

PARIS, Dec. 25—(AP)—Diplomats believed tonight that France and Great Britain had offered to give Germany aid in her economic troubles to forestall a mass Nazi invasion of Spain.

They based their belief, in part, upon the fact that Count Johannes Von Welzeck, the German Am-

Observed World Over

By The Associated Press

A busy world forgot toil and trouble yesterday in the joy of Christmas.

Around the globe, millions remembered the birth of Christ and joined in the spirit of "peace on earth, good will to men."

Turkey and trimmings were on the table as families reunited for the holiday feast.

In Great Britain the population rejoiced with the Duke and Duchess of Kent over the birth of a daughter, their second child.

Other members of the Royal family gathered at Sandringham for a quiet Christmas at home. The King and Queen, with the two little Princesses, attended service in the Chapel there.

Pope Pius XI, exhausted by the effort of a stirring appeal for peace broadcast to the world on Christmas eve, participated in religious services from his bed.

Soldiers, singing carols, paraded in Bethlehem.

Edward, Duke of Windsor, took an active part in a church service at Vienna.

In shell-battered Spain, the Yule calm was shattered by an Insurgent attack on Madrid.

The Christmas spirit peered through official disdain in Soviet Russia. It was publicly noticeable for the first time since 1917. But Moscow newspapers gave attention to war threats.

Captors freed General Chiang Kai-Shek, whose seizure made civil war imminent in China. The news changed the nation's holiday from gloom to joy and much celebrating followed.

Paris had one of the gayest observances of Noel since the war.

Traffic accidents caused more than 100 deaths in the United States, while a Christmas excursion boat overturned in the harbor of Kingston, Jamaica, and at least 15 persons were drowned. Among those lost were three children of one family, sent for a holiday cruise with their nurse.

DRAMATIC TURN

Hsueh-Liang, the government announcement said:

"The Marshal is coming to Nanking in person—to give himself up to the national authorities, if necessary but preferably to state clearly and openly his case to the leaders of the country."

When Marshal Chang, overlord of Manchuria until expelled by the Japanese army in 1930 launched his revolt at Sian-Fu two weeks ago he broadcast three demands:

Immediate military resistance to Japan's "encroachments." Recovery of Manchuria for China and re-establishment of Communists to the political life of the nation.

The Nanking foreign office asserted the Generalissimo's release was "unconditional" that no political terms had been made with his captor, who was declared to have "seen the error of his ways."

A spokesman of the executive Yuan said:

"Not one cent of cash was involved other than the expenses of emissaries to and from Sian-Fu."

What began as a gloomy Christmas for China changed quickly into a day of rejoicing as the news from Loyang was flashed throughout the country.

The people of Nanking and Shanghai were especially jubilant. In the capital a hectic celebration continued until midnight.

Many Nanking authorities gave major credit for the Generalissimo's release to skillful negotiations carried out at Sian-Fu by Madame Chiang and her brother.

When the wife of the Nanking leader flew to Sian-Fu two days ago to plead directly with the rebel chieftain she had to disregard the advice of many high officials who insisted any negotiated settlement with Marshal Chang would weaken the government's authority.

Military leaders insisted the rebellion must be crushed by force of arms if the government's prestige were to be upheld. They insisted the mutinous Marshal would be treated as a bandit.

In Nanking tonight there was no authoritative indication of what fate awaits the man, who plunged the nation into one of its gravest crises, when he arrives tomorrow.

Official quarters admitted several difficult questions remain to be settled, in addition to Marshal Chang's future.

Chief of these was the situation arising from the rebel leader's association with the Chinese Communists in Northern Shensi and Kansu Provinces. Nanking leaders asserted there could be "no compromise with the Reds," but what is to become of the Communist leaders—undoubtedly associated with Marshal Chang in his coup remains unsolved.

In spite of the government's assertion that its leader was freed "unconditionally," authoritative quarters expressed belief the ultimate settlement might include three points:

Marshal Chang's retirement from all official posts and exile abroad, at least temporarily;

Transfer of Marshal Chang's troops to the command of General Yen Hsi-Shan, pacification commissioner for Shansi and Suiyuan Provinces;

Payment of a large sum of
