Winning Essay On

lish an air line which would link up the three Maritime Provinces by means of a regular scheduled air service. These modern pioneers spent much time studying and working out plans which were essential to determine the steps which would be necessary to make such a venture possible. While the initial plans were being constructed, Anderson was killed in an overseas air tragedy. Burke courageously continued to work out the terms and conditions for the airline. His diligent and exacting work finally brought success, and on October 1, 1941, the Maritime Central Airways came into being. In the past eight years the Company has added new flying equipment, and the number of employees has been greatly increased. When flying operations were commenced, M. C. A. had but two planes—an eight-passenger monoplane and a ten-passenger monoplane. This number has increased to fourteen planes in actual operation.

Enviable Record

Our Maritime Airline has a record which few airways in the world can equal. At the present, there is only a very limited number of systems which have occasion to say that not one of the passengers travelling in their planes has been injured in any way. With this reputation to guard and maintain, travel by air in the three smallest provinces is the fastest and safest means of conveyance. Quite recently M. C. A. has formed a new company in Canada's tenth province, Newfoundland, under the name of Newfoundland Airways Limited.

The advantages of this excellent air system are numerous and provide interesting matter for reflection. The benefits derived from air travel in the Maritimes are unlimited, and almost daily we hear of new instances illustrating it's superiority.

First, let us consider the speed of the plane and the part it plays in helping man. Ten years ago a business trip to Upper Canada from Prince Edward Island meant three or four days' travel. In those days the only means of transportation was by train, which journeyed over a slow and circuitous route, necessitating stopovers and dreary hours spent on a smoky railroad siding. Today, travelling, to the business man, simply means making a reservation at his nearest airport, a later departure and an earlier arrival at his destination.

The Island vactionist, with only a short time at his disposal, benefits greatly by the regular flights. He reaches his destination more quickly, and saves valuable time by not having to make the journey by boat and train.

The exporter realizes the plane as an important participant in all his commercial enterprises, but it is only in a crisis that he becomes aware of the fact that it is indispensable. Such a situation was presented to the Prince Edward Island exporters in the summer of 1948, when the abundant strawberry crop compelled immediate transportation. If it had not been for the swift service by air, many thousands of dollars would have been lost. This speedy method of travel has opened up many new markets for other perishable foods such as live lobster. In 1946, the crustacea were first flown to Boston, and the fishermen received top prices for their catch. Thus in another phase of transportation, the plane has proved it's worth.

Mercy Flights

Mercy flights are not uncommon in the Maritimes. Many people, seriously ill and requiring immediate hospitalization, have been flown from remote districts.

Perhaps the people from the Magdalen Islands are among those who profit most because of our Maritime air travel. For many years, the Quebec-administered islands were isolated from all outside civilization from late autumn to late spring because of the ice blocking the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Now, such isolation is unheard of, and regular flights connect the Maritimes with these Islands.

When air travel was in it's infancy, many people were of the opinion that this modern means of journeying would undoubtedly prove very expensive. Recently, this idea has been abandoned, and people realize that travel by air is the cheapest means of transportation in the long run. This can easily be explained when we compare the expense of travelling by air with any other means, such as bus, train, or automobile. Think of the money spent in meals, sleeping accommodation, porters' tips, etc., while proceeding in any of the previously mentioned vehicles. Expenses are cut to a minimum when one travels by air, as the journey is usually too short to require sleeping facilities. Complimentary meals are served, baggage carried free of charge, stop-overs permitted at no extra charge, and every consideration to ensure the safety, comfort, and enjoyment of the passengers in the course of their travels.

The old adage: "Great oaks from little acorns grow" was never more truly applied than in the case of M.C.A., whose small beginning blossomed out into the many branches of it's system. Great things are in store for this airline. It's possibilities are limitless, and as time marches on, Maritime Central Airways keeps stride, providing the provinces by the sea with an air service second to none.
