fact I don't see how they can knock it down."

Mr. Jones confessed that he was more interested in the colored picture of a top ranking Prince Edward Island harness racer than in the Progressive Conservative convention.

"Look at that!" he said, pointing to the picture of Willard Kelly of Southport, P.E.I. on the front page of the magazine section of the Montreal Standard. "Kelly is a near neighbor of mine and went to school with me many years ago. He's a great racing driver and a fine fellow. People up here seeing that picture will get an idea of the type of horsemen we have down on the Island."

Asked if he proposed to slip out to the Ottawa Coliseum to get a peek at the Progressive Conservative convention, Mr. Jones said he wouldn't have time since he was returning to Charlottetown very shortly.

"I guess the Conservatives have two good men," he said. "John Diefenbaker seems to have a sound record in the House of Commons and the people of Ontario seem to like Mr. Drew or they wouldn't have voted for him. Leadership of a party is an important job and requires a good man."

est cannot be too highly, too rapidly, or too widely developed.

"It is vital to the defence of freedom to maintain a preponderance of moral, economic and military strength on the side of freedom. To direct its energies to this imperative end seems to me to be the supreme task of the United Nations today.

The Secretary Marshall of the United States listened attentively as Mr. King spoke from a brightly-lighted rostrum in the assembly hall in the Palais de Chaillot, but Foreign Secretary Bevin and Soviet delegate Vishinsky were absent from the crowded theatre.

The delegates gave the Prime Minister two rounds of applause during his speech and a resounding ovation as he returned to his seat. Delegates in the Soviet bloc did not applaud.

Mr. King told the assembly one further "all-compelling" reason why a world community sense cannot be "too completely developed" was the urgent necessity for effective atomic control.

The processes by which atomic energy was released now were well known to the scientists of all nations. Delegates in the Soviet bloc did not applaud.

Mr. King told the assembly one further "all-compelling" reason why a world community sense cannot be "too completely developed" was the urgent necessity for effective atomic control.

"The international control of atomic energy might be the most important step in the development of a power which could greatly benefit the whole of mankind.

"In the presence of the menace which atomic energy constitutes to the world, it is in the interest of our people as well as those of other lands, cannot strive too earnestly to ensure this mighty transformation.

"The hope of the world is to be realized only if the United Nations as the one world organization capable of establishing this international control."

He recalled that the Soviets had said the work of the Atomic Energy Commission had remained fruitless. This was not true. Every other nation which had taken part in the work had joined in "full acceptance" of the commission's report.

international disputes has proven or is proving inadequate to effect or to settle, additional means must be sought."

In a speech described by some correspondents as the "first moral call" to the world, the Canadian delegation leader, in his opening remarks, urged the world to move towards "the light of ordered freedom and universal peace."

In addition to the attack from Spaak, the Soviet Union was upbraided by Foreign Minister Roland Schuman of France for inability to get along with the Western Powers.

COUNCIL CHARGES

A spokesman for the Soviet bloc, K. I. Kovaliev of White Russia, said that a "war psychosis is being fanned" in the United Nations. He charged that the United States is engaging in an arms race and that "the feeling of inevitability of a new war is being popularized in the minds of masses."

Spaak, Premier and Foreign Minister of Belgium, delivered a sharp reply to the attack by the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister, Andrei Vishinsky, last Saturday on the Western Powers.

"He accused the Russians of an imperialist policy 'more ambitious than the policy of the Czars themselves,' and added: 'We fear you when you preach this antiquated, this absolute doctrine of absolute national sovereignty.'"

Spaak, the first president of the U.N. Assembly in 1946 who has crossed lances repeatedly with the Russians, said the Assembly needs a "spectacular coup—a compromise."

He said that as a remedy to the east-west dispute, attempts to revise the U.N. charter must be abandoned. He said later this meant he would drop his opposition to the veto. In return, he added, Russia "must promise us to co-operate to work with the genuine spirit of the charter."

"Perhaps it's not too late," he said.

Spaak said that in the deadlock between the east and west it was the Western Powers who were outcome of the voting for the leadership Saturday. John Diefenbaker, 53-year-old member of the Commons for Lake Centre in Saskatchewan, also arrived by plane and spent several hours with his campaign organizers. This information was given at a press conference within a week and reiterated his stand on various prominent issues.

Donald Fleming, 43-year-old member for Toronto Eglinton, arrived about the city meeting friends and supporters. A Quebec delegation gave a cocktail party for the press on behalf of Mr. Fleming, who does not drink or smoke.

Garfield Case, 49, member for Grey North in Ontario, conducted what appeared to be a one-man campaign. He spent a good deal of time in his hotel lobby expounding his views and his campaign plans. He plans to apply for election to the leadership on a platform of monetary reform and better treatment for labor.

Meanwhile, a 193-man resolution committee was busy in the sprawling Coliseum where the convention will be officially opened Thursday. The site is the same as that of the national Liberal convention which last month chose Rt. Hon. Louis St. Laurent to succeed Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

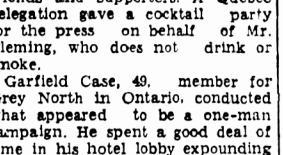

The resolutions committee, which met in camera, was split into sub-committees on external affairs, agriculture, labor, natural resources, social security, veterans affairs, trade and taxation. They have some 500 resolutions to wade through and are due to report to the convention Friday with a set of proposals for inclusion in the party platform.

While the committee worked in the building, John Bracken, the party's retiring leader, wandered around greeting delegates and saying farewell to Mr. Bracken, 65, is giving up the leadership because of age and ill-health.
